"He never planted a doubt." This is a tribute any one might covet. But we can never be sure a man is entitled to it. It is sometimes said of a man who has accepted without questioning the creed of his church that he never disturbed the faith of any one. But he may have troubled many who could not believe as he did. If he causes young people to identify religion with his creed, he may be a means of destroying their faith when they find difficulties with his creed. A certain hardness in adherence to a doctrine tends to create doubt. The spirit of gentleness and forbearance helps the perplexed when dogmatic statements increase perplexity. One whose faith in God and in man is expressed in wise and kindly deeds is a creator of faith. But there are many ways of building up faith. The man who is wide enough in his sympathies and in his understanding to give encouragement to faith wherever it is found and however weak it is, is a great servant of God, and much needed in every age.

IS HE CRAZY?

The owner of a large plantation in Mississippi, where the fine figs grow, is giving away a few five-acre fruit tracts. The only condition is that figs be planted. The owner wants enough figs raised to supply a co-operative canning factory. You can secure five acres and an interest in the canning factory by writing the Eubank Farms Company, 734 Keystone, Pittsburgh, Pa. They will plant and care for your trees for $6 per month. Your profit should be $1,000 per year. Some think this man is crazy for giving away such valuable land, but there may be method in his madness.

THE CO-OPERATION COMMITTEE.

A mass meeting of friends of The Christian Century held in First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 10, 1914, appointed a committee of six, whose names are appended below, to devise and, as far as possible, carry out plans for the adequate financing of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society. It is now well understood that this Society is a religious corporation, having no capital stock, no private investment and no personal profits. Membership in the Society is issued to churches and Sunday-schools that patronize it, and to individuals who make gifts to its support. Details as to membership will be sent upon application to the office of the Society. The committee is now seeking to secure funds with which to sustain the Society during the next five years while it works out the problem of self-support. We believe this to be one of the most urgent and significant causes now making its appeal to the Disciples of Christ. It is high time that a religious journal representing the finest ideals of our Disciples' history and a publication enterprise entirely freed from the commercial spirit and consecrated to the task of creating a worthy literature to represent and instruct our people should be established by the gifts of those who cherish such ideals. To this end we have asked the editor of The Christian Century and have obtained his consent to set apart this page* for the use of the Committee in interpreting its work and in calling upon those of like mind everywhere to make gifts. This page, therefore, is entirely outside of editorial jurisdiction during the period in which the Committee undertakes to carry out the grateful task laid upon it by the Atlanta mass meeting.

DISCIPLES PUBLICATION SOCIETY
BY Thos S. Clark
SECRETARY

Bloomington, Illinois, Wins First Honor

THE Sunday School of First Church, Bloomington, Ill., Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones, pastor, and Dr. C. P. Hanson, superintendent, earns the first certificate of membership in the Disciples Publication Society.

Their credit coupons, amounting to one hundred dollars worth, were presented many months ago, but the certificates were not printed until the past week. Other schools have since presented their coupons and their certificates are now being issued. Among them are Central Church, Des Moines, Ia.; Magnolia Ave., Ft. Worth, Tex.; New Berlin, O.; Wabash Ave., Kansas City, etc. Scores of schools have acquired sufficient credit to claim membership and they will no doubt present their coupons as soon as they learn that the certificates are now ready for issuance.

The Disciples Publication Society is destined to bind together hundreds and ultimately thousands of our worthy churches and Sunday-schools in a fellowship of the highest ideals of Christian education and service. It is a thoroughly co-operative, mutual and democratic organization. It has no private ends to serve. It has no "boss" over it. Nobody can make personal profit out of it. Its directors are subject to re-election or retirement. It is a true "brotherhood publication enterprise" and will be just what the brotherhood makes it. Its power for good is unlimited.

As its inner principle and purpose are discerned the Society will captivate the imagination of our church and Sunday-school leaders and win their enthusiastic loyalty and patronage.

The Society does not ask Sunday-schools to patronize it because it is a brotherhood house. It does not ask for patronage at all. Its position is that every Sunday-school ought to buy the best literature it can find, wherever it can find it.

The fact that whatever profits may be earned by the Disciples Publication Society are to go to missionary and educational causes is not sufficient reason why Sunday-schools should buy their literature here.

But the Society believes it offers far and away the richest, most stimulating and most adequate system of Sunday-school literature in existence. All it asks is that the schools will send for samples and compare them with anything else published.

Their own good sense will then tell them what to do.

THE Disciples Publication Society is a religious corporation through which the churches and Sunday-schools of the Disciples of Christ own and control the publication of their literature of religious education and information.

The Society has no capital stock and no individual owners. Private persons do not benefit by its earnings.

Its charter provides that any profits are appropriated to the cause of religious education as represented in the work of missionary societies, Sunday-schools, colleges, and other organizations that promote Christian progress through Christian culture.

In lieu of private stockholders, the by-laws provide for members of the Society to be named by local churches and Sunday-schools. Any church or school purchasing $100 worth of literature or merchandise from the Society is thereby qualified to name one member.

Credit coupons are issued from time to time for all purchases of literature or merchandise amounting to $5 or any multiple of $5. Upon presentation of $100 worth of these coupons a membership certificate is issued.

A church or school is not limited in the number of membership certificates it may earn, and it is entitled to name one member for each membership certificate held. In every meeting of the Society each member is entitled to cast one vote.

Membership certificates cover a period of five years, at the end of which period a new series of certificates is issued, based upon patronage then current.

The meetings of the Society are held annually, at the time of the national conventions.

The executive management of the business of the Society is committed to a board of trustees who are elected by the Society at its annual meetings.

The Society is thus a thoroughly mutual, unselfish, and democratic organization, whose property and policy are completely in the control of the churches and Sunday-schools of the brotherhood and whose aim is to advance the cause of religious education and serve the Kingdom of God.

It is worthy the most generous patronage of all Christian people.

Any Sunday School or Church in the Brotherhood may earn a Membership in the Disciples Publication Society SIMPLY BY PATRONIZING IT!

Character Talks

By Frank Waller Allen, pastor of First Christian Church, Springfield, Ill.

Rev. Frank Waller Allen.

THE GREAT FRIEND

There is nothing worse than loneliness. No one to greet you with a pleasant word or to shake you by the hand and talk about the weather. I remember when I was in New York City one time. I was in the newspaper "game" as a reporter and I had gone to this city, the largest city in the United States, thinking that perhaps I might put my talents to work with the large newspapers there. I did not know a person in that city, and how I wished every morning that I might meet someone who would shake me by the hand and say to me, "Do you think that it will rain today?" Many are lonely, unclean and rotting with sin, who need the touch of Jesus to make them strong against temptation, make them clean and whole and fill them with salvation.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON, EDITOR HERBERT L. WILLETT, CONTRIBUTING EDITOR

The Disciples and the Increasing Passion for the Spiritual

THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST ARE CONSCIOUSLY STRIVING TO BECOME A MORE SPIRITUAL PEOPLE.

The sway of doctrinal controversy is at an end; the pre-eminence of the head over the heart is being reversed; a certain mystical note is creeping into our preaching; there is a responsiveness among the people to a leader who speaks a word on behalf of the soul's inner life, and there is a quiet but positive protest making itself felt against those things in the churches that either inhibit spirituality or substitute for it.

Probably there is no people in Christendom where the longing for a closer walk with God is more wistful, more conscious, and, it may be added, more determined than among the Disciples.

We are disappointed in some things.

Chiefly we are disappointed in ourselves.

We are not the fraternal, catholic-minded, winsome people that our Christian union plea presupposes. We are waking up to the fact that correct ordinances and a sound creed are not a basis for Christian union.

We are discovering that Christian union is primarily Christian fellowship. Instead of standing off and scrutinizing other Christians and asking whether we ought to fellowship them we are beginning to ask whether they ought to fellowship us! Are we the kind of people—do we possess a quality of spiritual life—have we such breadth and depth of religious experience that for a Methodist, a Presbyterian, a Congregationalist, to take his stand with us is to pass into a more adequate spiritual association?

These questions we are asking more urgently and self-searchingly than other Christians because we are coming to feel the spiritual implications of our plea for unity.

It is a tremendous spiritual responsibility to talk Christian unity!

Christian unity is rooted in personal fellowship with Christ. The Disciples never can make the slightest impression upon the Christian world with their talk about unity except as they approach the Christian world through the heart of Christ. We ourselves must be at home in Christ's heart. We must know and possess His mind. The unity for which we plead must be the unity for which he prayed: "that they may be one in us!"

Christ did not pray for a unity in creed, nor for a unity in ordinances, but for a unity with himself in God. This is a unity of spiritual life which can be brought about only by the creation and contagion of a genuine and deep spiritual life on the part of those who plead for it.

The Disciples of Christ are in these days beginning to feel the moral weight of this spiritual principle, and many of the finer souls among them are turning toward the sources of spiritual knowledge and power with a profound consciousness of need.

Many are the tokens that bear out these statements.

First, there is an increasingly pronounced and consistent spiritual quality in our conventions. The speakers at the last three national gatherings, at Louisville, Toronto and Atlanta, that were most enthusiastically heard were men and women who lifted their subject above the level of mere things up to the level of spiritual principles.

A signal feature of the national conventions is the now well established early morning prayer hour. Beginning three or four years ago with a small group, mainly representatives of the foreign missionary task, the morning watch has come to be kept by a steadily increasing number, until, at Atlanta, as many as 250 persons gathered each morning before breakfast for prayer. One always left these gatherings not only with a keen sense of the divine presence but with an appreciation of the dignity and grace and power that inhered in the personnel of the gathering.

Another token of the responsiveness of Disciples to the spiritual appeal is seen in their pre-eminent devotion to foreign missions. No missionary task has gripped the conscience of this brotherhood as has that of foreign missions. While the home missionary task has been but indifferently supported, and even ordinary humanitarian benevolence has but lately taken a place in the circle of our organized unselfish interests, the claim of foreign missions has met a continually deepening response in gifts of money, consecration of life and general interest.

Is foreign missions a more divine obligation than home missions? Is it a more spiritual task than caring for orphans and the aged or Christianizing immigrants?

No one would so affirm. What then is the secret of foreign missions' success among the Disciples? This: the leaders of the foreign mission enterprise have had the ability and the spiritual insight to lift their cause out of the mere pragmatic routine of Christian duty and to project it upon the high level of the spiritual life, until it has come to be the veritable symbol of spirituality among us.

When we think of foreign missions we think of prayer!

The foreign missionary enterprise comes nearer being the common denominator of the various discordant and often contentious groups of Disciples than any other single enterprise. This is because it is gripping our souls below the levels of doctrinal opinions and temperamental tendencies at the level of our common spiritual life.

A third token of conscious spiritual hunger is the general demand arising from Disciples churches for ministers who can interpret and build up the spiritual life.

Our congregations are wearying of the preaching of abstract doctrines—we do not say doctrines, but abstract doctrines. Most of the pastors who remain a long time with a single congregation are men who speak a spiritual message, men who have learned where the deep wells of living water are and have provided themselves with vessels wherewith to draw.

The debating preacher, the "campaigning" preacher, the political preacher, the roustabout preacher, these are short-lived.

But the man who speaks for God, and whose people come to believe that he speaks much with God, abides with his flock many years and the church is blessed in his ministry.

The Disciples have an increasing number of such men, and as the demand of the churches for spiritual leadership becomes more conscious, God will send a great company of prophets to interpret and unveil things unseen.

The Training of Christian Leaders

A Survey of the Institutions and Methods by which Disciples Prepare Aspiring Youth to Serve the Church.

BY W. C. MORRO.

This is the first time such a survey of the religious-educational activities of the Disciples has ever been made. It is an illuminating interpretation of a basic department of Christian responsibility. Professor Morro of Butler College, Indianapolis, was appointed to make such a survey by the Commission on Religious Education of the General Convention of Churches of Christ. His findings were embodied in the impersonal report of that Commission presented to the Atlanta Convention. The work was so manifestly the product of a single mind that The Christian Century begged from the members of the Commission the name of the author and takes satisfaction in placing his name at the head of the article. This survey deserves to be studied by all. It throws light upon the problem from the standpoint of our educators and from the standpoint of our laymen who give money to the great task of training Christian leaders.

THE theological seminaries with their stereotyped curricula have been the most conservative of bodies. It has been extremely hard to break or even bend in the least degree the system which had become hardened by reason of age. The result is that the standard theological seminary has lost the respect of modern educators. In 1911 a commission was appointed by the Religious Education Association to investigate the preparation of religious leaders in universities and colleges. In collecting material a series of questions was addressed to the presidents of higher institutions and to a few other interested persons, and in it was this question:

"Should such training be left entirely to theological seminaries?" The report of the commission on the answers to this question was as follows: "The answers are remarkably one-sided. They stand: 6 yeas; 11 qualified; 70 no.

"The qualified answers say: 'Yes, if reformed;' 'No, as now constituted;' 'Not entirely, but probably most theological schools should be broadened into schools for religious and social workers rather than for pastors only,' and the like.

"Not only the number of 'no's' is significant, but the quality of the replies is more so. The explosive intensity of the responses of sober-minded educators as they rebel against the suggestion of leaving such work to the theological seminaries is instructive. 'Never! Never!' exclaims one. 'They are back numbers,' says another. Another observes, 'They are a generation behind their times.' Still another remarks, 'Many who could be trained for effective service will not enter them and many seminaries are too narrow.' The president of a denominational college says: 'No, because intellectual training is not enough, and the world cannot be sufficiently supplied with good workers by the theological seminaries.'"

THE CURRICULUM OF MODERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARIES.

No doubt much of the adverse criticism of the seminaries implied in these answers was deserved in the past, but a change is taking place in the seminaries. A reputation for lack of worth, however, is hard to overcome. No doubt many of the educators who gave the answers to the questionnaire mentioned in the previous paragraph must have written in ignorance of the changes that have taken place in the curricula of the best seminaries within recent years. No one of the four great subjects of theological training has been abandoned, but all have undergone modification in the nature of the emphasis put upon them; in the point of view from which they are studied; and in their relative importance. In a great many of the most active seminaries Hebrew is no longer required as a prerequisite to graduation, though most of them still specify Hebrew as a condition of obtaining the B. D. degree.

Professor W. C. Morro, Ph.D.

Since many of the very best colleges no longer require Greek for the A. B. degree, quite a number of young men who toward the close of their college course turn their thoughts toward the ministry find themselves confronted with the seminary's insistence upon Greek. It was the freely expressed judgment of a number of those who attended the conference of theological seminaries in Chicago in connection with the Federal Council in 1912, that many young men are by this lack of Greek barred from the ministry. Many seminaries have sought to overcome the difficulty by giving to their students instruction in Greek, beginning with elements. This is not a permanent solution of the difficulty, for an increasing number of young men are unwilling to begin the study of a new language at so late a period in life. It was the opinion of many of those who attended the conference referred to just above that before long the seminaries would be compelled to admit to their full course and as candidates for the B. D. degree students who have had neither Hebrew nor Greek. Quite a number are already admitting such students to diploma courses which confer no degree.

MOST REVOLUTIONARY FEATURE.

But the most revolutionary feature of the newer seminary courses is not the omissions from the old standard course, but the added branches of instruction which have been admitted. There are few seminaries that do not have some sort of instruction in sociology, economics, or other social sciences. Instruction in the Science and History of Missions is freely recognized as a part of the normal seminary course. Comparative religion is also admitted to the curricula of a number of seminaries. Religious pedagogy is rapidly coming into its own. There is among the seminaries which are most successfully adapting themselves to modern views and needs no standard seminary course. A change is taking place and things are still plastic. The Chicago conference recognized that the B. D. degree course might be standardized in regard to the number of years required and in regard to certain indispensable courses of study, yet in the main each institution, in seeking the welfare of its own students and in meeting its own peculiar needs, must grope its own way toward the light.

It should be observed that the seminaries which have responded to modern conditions are mainly those which are connected with large universities and are interdenominational. Isolated denominational seminaries are little changed.

MODIFICATIONS OF SEMINARY COURSE.

Various reasons have led to the modifications of the regular seminary course. The most important are: Earnest and consecrated persons who cannot satisfy the educational requirements seek to enter the institution; the territory for which the seminary prepares ministers does not, in the judgment of the seminary authorities, require the most extensively trained workers; and foreign-speaking candidates for the ministry among foreign peoples demand a less thorough training. The result is that a shorter course is offered; substitutes are permitted for the more difficult subjects; or the entrance requirements are lowered and the student is permitted to take courses that he can carry. Here are a few typical examples: Garrett Biblical Institute, in addition to its degree course, offers a Greek-Hebrew course for those who can take some Greek and Hebrew but not enough for the degree; a Greek-English course for those who can take some Greek but no Hebrew; and an English course for those who must omit both Greek and Hebrew. The Southern Baptist Seminary offers a two-years' course, as does also the Chicago Seminary in its Christian Institute. The Bangor Theological Seminary and the Atlanta Theological Seminary take all persons for whom they can render a service and help them as they can, though they grant degrees to those only who conform to the standard.

TRAINING SCHOOLS.

There are in the United States over forty Training Schools (J. E. McCullough, of the Inter-Church College, Nashville, Tenn., says 45; E. H. Knight, of the Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy, says 43). Most of these profess to train religious workers other than preachers, but many persons take the courses offered by these schools and then drift into preaching. In addition to this, eight of these training schools profess to train men for preaching, and several of the missionary training schools send out ordained missionaries. No hard and fast line can be drawn between these schools and the seminaries. In the main, the distinction is to be discovered in the fact that the training schools have no fixed entrance requirements and the course of instruction offered by them is shorter, being in the majority of cases two years in length.

HOW TRAINED AMONG THE DISCIPLES.

Probably not many even of our ministers are aware of the fact that our method of training ministers is in some respects as distinctive as our plea. Evidence of this may be found in the sixth annual report of the president and treasurer of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, issued in 1911. This report contains a series of articles on professional education, one of which deals with schools of theology. In a discussion of the increase and decrease of students for the ministry during the last forty years, the writer, presumably the president, in the interest of accuracy and exactness, eliminates from the comparison the theological schools of certain smaller sects, women and negro theological students, and "numerous theological schools of the Disciples of Christ and the Christian Church." The reason assigned for the elimination of the last mentioned class is that "men studying professionally for the ministry are mingled with college students taking Biblical courses." In reality, this is due to our zeal for numbers which is now bringing our evangelists to repentance in sackcloth and ashes.

WHAT IS A MINISTERIAL STUDENT?

Our college men have not been without the same sin. If a youth ever expressed above a whisper the hope that he may some day preach, he is at once labeled as a candidate for the ministry, and as soon as he enters some school or college he is a ministerial student, and woe to him who, having put his hand to the plow, looks back. A boy in the grades and a man with a degree are placed in the same category. Both alike are ministerial students, and few of our colleges make any distinction. We need a standard definition of what is a ministerial student, and the statistics of our college reports should conform to this. With the elimination of preparatory departments from our colleges, the temptation to report preparatory ministerial students will be largely removed. The compilers of our Year Book and others who gather statistics as to the number of ministerial students should, in the future, distinguish between collegiate and graduate ministerial students. The former should be those who have not yet, and the latter should be those who have, completed a college course.

INSTITUTIONS OF THE SEMINARY TYPE.

It requires time and the fixing of educational traditions to develop such a type of institution as the theological seminary. In some cases it is quickly developed, but this is because the communion which fosters it is a split from some larger body and has brought with it the educational spirit which had developed within the parent body. Most of the smaller Presbyterian churches are examples of this. The Disciples of Christ have had a brief history, but the shortness of the time will not alone account for the absence of such institutions in the past. Our fathers were gathered up out of many quarters and had to develop a tradition of their own, but more than this, the intense abhorrence with which they regarded all things clerical and theological must account for the slowness of institutions of the seminary type to make an appearance.

ONE "SEMINARY" ONLY.

We have founded many colleges and universities, but until recently few of our existing institutions could be classified as belonging to the seminary type, though almost all contribute to the training of preachers. Only one of our institutions has chosen a name that designated it as a seminary. Drake University's College of the Bible in entrance requirements and in length of course conforms to this type. It bestows the B. D. degree. The College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., has long offered an English and a classical course. The latter requires for completion the same time which is necessary to complete a regular seminary course, but it permitted its student to take his ministerial training while still an undergraduate. While some seminaries permit this, it is not generally approved. It now offers the B. D. Degree in conformity with the usual seminary custom. Butler College, beginning with this year, outlines such a course and grants the B. D. degree. The Disciples' Divinity House, in connection with the University of Chicago, offers training in a fully equipped seminary, which, however, is in no sense an educational institution of the Disciples. The Eugene Bible University outlines four courses, one of which is a graduate course and covers three years. The one completing it receives the B. D. degree. The Bible College of Missouri also announces a course leading to the B. D. degree. It frankly claims in its catalog to be a seminary. Texas Christian University has a classical and an English course. For the completion of the former it grants the B. D. degree. It admits a student of sophomore standing to the pursuit of the studies of this course. Bethany, too, has a three-years' course for ministers, but seems to avoid calling itself a seminary since its catalogue states that this course leads "to the degree of Bachelor of Biblical Literature, which is the equivalent of the B. D. course of the standard seminaries." The Phillips Bible Institute, in its first catalogue, announced a three-years' course and offered the B. D. degree to any graduate of a high school and college who completed this course, but this announcement was withdrawn from its second catalogue.

OVERCOMING OUR DREAD.

These statements make it evident that we are overcoming our dread of theological seminaries. Most of our educational institutions are willing to don the uniform and march in the ranks with them as brothers. We are in a transitional period, and these are but indications of what we may reasonably expect in a few years. It is important that we should not make the mistake of cheapening our work by permitting the name to be assumed too easily and the degrees conferred upon those whose preparation has not been adequate. A careful consideration of the facts presented above make it evident that such a warning is not without need. No one of our institutions should grant the B. D. degree unless it is financially able to maintain an institution of such rank, and should conform to the recognized educational standards of similar institutions. Where this cannot be done the degree should not be granted. Failure to observe this caution will discredit our educational work.

TRAINING SCHOOLS.

E. H. Knight, of the Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy, accredits to the Disciples two of the forty-three religious training schools of the United States. One of these is the Missionary Training School (now the College of Missions), Indianapolis, but the other is not named. As was stated above, the distinction between a seminary and a training school is not easily stated, though it consists in the main in less rigid insistence upon entrance requirements, a shorter course, and the aim to equip its students for other religious work than preaching. A number of the institutions of the Disciples at the time of their organization were more properly of this type, though none were willing to assume the name and restrict their activities to the somewhat narrower field which is open to the training school. The reasons for this are that few (if any, except the College of Missions) of our institutions for males, have ever been organized without the conception of its founders being that its main task was to train men for preaching; hence their tendency has been to press out into the field of the college or the seminary rather than remain in the restricted one of the training school.

DEFINITE FIELD FOR SUCH SCHOOLS.

At their beginning, the College of the Bible and the School of the Evangelists (now the Johnson Bible College) were of the training school type, except that their goal was the educating of preachers, and for this reason they did not adhere to this type. This is likewise true of our many other Bible Colleges. The Phillips Bible Institute, by its initial announcement, gave rise to the expectation that it would be a real training school, but its emphasis upon the training of preachers is evidence that it will follow the others seminary- and college-ward. The College of Missions, as its new name indicates, is not, nor was it in the beginning, what is usually meant by a training school. We have not a single institution which, in its real character and by its own acknowledgment is a training school, though there are a number which, judged by their equipment, qualifications of their students, and by the work which they are actually doing, are of this rank. There is a very definite field for institutions of this type, and in the near future we should have some to occupy it for us. We need two or three institutions which will acknowledge themselves to be of the Training School type, and which will do this work without attempting to be either colleges or seminaries.

MINISTERIAL DEPARTMENTS IN COLLEGES.

In the past, the Disciples have trained their preachers in one or the other of two types of institutions. One was the College of the Bible. The one at Lexington was the first of its kind. Now there are many of them. Some one has said that the Methodist church has distributed Wesleyan Universities in every region where its preachers have gone. The Disciples have similarly planted Colleges of the Bible wherever their preachers have succeeded in planting a few churches.

These institutions have differed much in their curricula and in their ideals, but there has been a similarity in their methods and aims. At first, their entrance requirements have not been high and the curriculum has aimed directly at the end sought, viz., the training of preachers. In most cases, there has been a raising of the educational standards as circumstances demanded it.

The other type of institution in which the Disciples have trained their preachers is an adjunct of the college which afforded the ministerial student more or less of Biblical training along with his literary and scientific education. When the educational standard was low, more of this ministerial training was permitted, and when it was high, there was a diminution in the amount of special training which the ministerial student received. In some instances, a graduate ministerial course of about one year in length was offered, which often led to the A. M. degree. A few typical examples are mentioned: Out of 120 semester hours required by Hiram College for the A. B. degree, a student may elect as many as fifty-three hours from courses in Christian Literature and Service. Eureka is even more liberal. It announces a course for ministerial students in which sixty-seven of the 120 credits (hours) required for graduation may be taken in Biblical and religious subjects. Keuka College requires 2,400 actual hours of class work for graduation. Of these, 504 may be taken in the Old Testament, New Testament, church history, and homiletics These examples may be regarded as representative of the others. For the reason pointed out above, there is a tendency among the colleges to diminish this type of ministerial training. This is a matter of regret, for its serves a most useful purpose. The colleges, however, should exercise care not to allow so large a per cent of ministerial training in the college curriculum as to weaken the general education which the preacher of today greatly needs.

In a subsequent issue Dr. Morro will tell how Disciples train other Christian leaders, such as missionaries, social workers, etc.

Our "Visionary" President

GEORGE CREEL, IN THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

AMERICA is a nation of incurable dreamers. The heart of the people is not found in ledgers, their aspirations are not expressed in profits, and never at any time have schemes of purely material advancement possessed the largest appeal.

This is the explanation of Woodrow Wilson. To attempt an interpretation of his hold upon the popular imagination in terms of strict mentality is to commit one's self to the patent absurdity that he is the first President with brains. Others have matched him in intellectual grasp, and what sets him apart, even as it set Lincoln apart, is nothing else than an exact comprehension of passionate idealism as the animating impulse of America.

Vision, spirit, ideals—without the clew afforded by these dream words Woodrow Wilson is a blank, the United States stammering and unintelligible.

The soul of the many is found in the far-flung idealism of the Declaration of Independence, not in the cautious phrases of the Constitution. False prophets and strange gods have won no more than lip-service, for deep in the heart of the nation an abiding faith in the ultimate triumph of love, justice and brotherhood remains untouched.

What larger confirmation is needed than the present impregnable position of Woodrow Wilson? He lacks color, exhibits no mastery of spectacular values, makes no dramatic tours, contributes little to the thing called "human interest," that queer newspaper compound of anecdote and unconventional incident; yet no man since Lincoln has niched himself so ineradicably in the confidence of the people.

He has had the vision to see beneath the stagnancies of materialism down to the well-springs of an intense spirituality. He does not mistake backwaters for the living stream. The insistence that he is the last word in well-ordered intellect, a personality as cold and remote as though Kant's "Critique of Pure Reason" were galvanized into action, is the stupidity of muddlers who have lost all touch with the elemental simplicities.

There can be small doubt that a practical president would have recognized Huerta, for it was obviously the course dictated by self-interest as well as by the surface ferment of public opinion. Backed by the approval of the United States, the dictator could have strengthened himself in such manner as to restore a semblance of peace and to protect American concessions, requisites that would have permitted President Wilson to wash his hands in approved Pilate style.

While recognition of Huerta was the wise course, as practicality defines wisdom, it was not the right course. The acknowledgment that he asked involved a sanction of assassination and acquiescence in the legitimacy of murder as a substitute for constitutional procedure. His official existence promised a restoration of the tyrannies of Diaz and a continuance of the virtual slavery of the great mass of the Mexican people. President Wilson's address at Mobile is more than any mere explanation of his course; it is the most illuminating exposition of the spirit of democracy since Lincoln bared his soul at Gettysburg.

The issue of the Panama Canal tolls controversy had already given plain indication that the people of the United States were responding to Woodrow Wilson's appeal to submerged ideals.

Had Woodrow Wilson been practical he would have kept silent, permitting the Taft legislation to stand, or, seeing the storm of seemingly adverse sentiment, backed out his dilemma with a graceful and explanatory wave of the hand in the direction of the "rugged Democracy of America."

Woodrow Wilson, however, went back to the Declaration of Independence for precedent, spanning the years of materialistic trick and compromise, and when he spoke these words to Congress it was as though Patrick Henry and Thomas Jefferson lived again:

"We consented to the treaty; its language we accepted if we did not recognize; and we are too big, too powerful, too self-respecting a nation to interpret with a too strained or refined reading the words of our own promises just because we have power enough to give us leave to read them as we please. The large thing to do is the only thing we can afford to do, a voluntary withdrawal from the position everywhere questioned and misunderstood. We ought to reverse our action without raising the question whether we were right or wrong, and so deserve once more our reputation for generosity and for the redemption of every obligation without quibble or hesitation."

Woodrow Wilson is in no sense a herald. The revolution of betrayed idealism has been in progress for more than a century, and in the last decade particularly there has been steady assault upon evil and outworn institutions. These passionate gropings of the spirit in the direction of ideals professed and not practiced have merely lacked great leadership and authoritative expression. This is what Woodrow Wilson gives.

"Bob" Burdette's Faith

Being a Letter Written by the Now Deceased Humorist to a Friend.

Ever since June, 1912, when I made my last public appearance, we have been living in our summer home down here by the sea. "Eventide," Mrs. Burdette named it, because it faces the sunset. It is very pleasant, this "afternoon land," in spite of sickness. I watch the sunset as I look out over the rim of the blue Pacific, and there is no mystery beyond the horizon line, because I know what there is over there. I have been there. I have journeyed in those lands. Over there where the sun is just sinking is Japan. That star is rising over China. In that direction lie the Philippines. I am perfectly conscious of that.

Well, there is another land that I look toward as I watch the sunset. I have never seen it. I have never seen any one who has been there; but it has a more abiding reality than any of these lands which I do know. This land beyond the sunset—this land of immortality, this fair and blessed country of the soul—why, this Heaven of ours is the one thing in the world which I know with absolute, unshaken, unchangeable certainty. This I know with a knowledge that is never shadowed by a passing cloud of doubt. I may not always be certain about this world; my geographical locations may sometimes become confused. But that other world—that I know. And as the afternoon sun sinks lower Faith shines more clearly, and Hope, lifting her voice in a higher key, sings the songs of fruition.

My work is about ended, I think. The best of it I have done poorly; any of it I might have done better. But I have done it. And in a fairer land, with finer material and a better working light, I will do better work.

Good-bye, God bless you, and keep you day by day. ROBERT J. BURDETTE.

Vodka Vanishes from Russia

Editor's Note: Vodka is the Russian spirituous beverage. It is made chiefly from potatoes or corn with green rye malt. It has been illegal to sell it unless it contained at least forty per cent of alcohol

THERE is prohibition in Russia today, prohibition which means that not a drop of vodka, whisky, brandy, gin, or other strong liquor is obtainable in a territory populated by 150,000,000 and covering one-sixth of the habitual globe, so says a dispatch received by the Associated Press from Petrograd last week.

The word prohibition must be taken literally. It means that a vast population which consumed $1,000,000 worth of vodka a year, whose ordinary condition has been described by Russians themselves as ranging from a slight degree of stimulation upward, has been lifted almost in one day from a drunken inertia to sobriety.

On that day when the mobilization of the Russian army began special policemen visited every public place where vodka is sold, locked up the supply of the liquor, and placed on the shop the imperial seal.

PEASANTS GAIN IN HEALTH.

From the day this step was taken drunkenness vanished in Russia. The results are seen at once in the peasantry; already they are beginning to look like a different race. The marks of suffering, the pinched looks of illness and improper nourishment have gone from their faces.

There has been also a remarkable change in the appearance of their clothing. The destitute character of the homes of the poor has been replaced with something like order and thrift.

In Petrograd and Moscow the effect of these improved conditions is startling. On holidays in these two cities inebriates always filled the police stations and often they lay about on the sidewalks and even in the streets. Things are so different today that unattended women may now pass at night through portions of these cities where it was formerly dangerous even for men. Minor crimes and misdemeanors have almost vanished.

WORK OF PEASANT-BORN MAN.

This miracle has been accomplished by one man. He is Michael D. Tchelisheff, a peasant by birth, originally a house painter by profession, then mayor of the city of Samara, and now a millionaire. Physically he is a giant, standing over 6 feet 4 inches and of powerful build. Although he is 55 years old, he looks much younger. His movements display the energy of youth, his eyes are animated, and his black hair is not tinged by gray.

In Petrograd Mr. Tchelisheff is generally found in a luxurious suite of rooms in one of the best hotels. He goes about clad in a blue blouse with a tasseled girdle and baggy black breeches tucked into heavy boots.

LEARNED ALCOHOL WAS POISON.

Speaking of what he has accomplished, Mr. Tchelisheff said:

"I was reared in a small Russian village. There were no schools or hospitals or any of the improvements we are accustomed to in civilized communities. I picked up an education from old newspapers and stray books. One day I chanced upon a book which treated of the harmfulness of alcohol.

"It stated among other things that vodka was a poison. I was so impressed with this, knowing that everybody drank vodka, that I asked the first physician I met if the statement were true. He said yes.

"At the end of the '80s there came famine in Russia, followed by agrarian troubles. I saw a crowd of peasants demand from a local landlord all the grain and foodstuffs in his granary. This puzzled me; I could not understand how honest men were indulging in what seemed to be highway robbery. But I noted that every man who was taking part in this raid was a drinking man, while their fellow villagers who were abstemious had sufficient provisions in their own homes. Thus it was that I observed the industrial effects of vodka drinking.

Count Leo Tolstoi who wrote the word "poison" into the label carried by every bottle of vodka in Russia.

MURDER DETERMINES COURSE.

"At Samara I decided to more than passively disapprove of vodka. At this time I was an alderman, and many of the tenants living in my houses were workingmen. One night a drunken father in one of my houses killed his wife. This incident made such a terrible impression on me that I decided to fight vodka with all my strength.

"On the supposition that the government was selling vodka for the revenue I calculated the revenue received from its consumption in Samara. I then introduced a bill in the city council providing that the city give the sum of money to the imperial treasury, requesting at the same time that the sale of vodka be prohibited. This bill passed and the money was appropriated. It was offered to the government, but the government promptly refused it.

"It then dawned upon me that the Russian bureaucracy did not want the people to become sober, for the reason that it was easier to rule autocratically a drunken mob than a sober people.

COUNCIL BEATS ANTI-VODKA BILL.

"I was elected to the duma on an anti-vodka platform. In the duma I proposed a bill permitting the inhabitants of any town to close the local vodka shops, and providing also that every bottle of vodka should bear a label with the word poison. At my request the wording of this label in which the evils of vodka were set forth was done by the late Count Leo Tolstoi. This bill passed the duma and went to the imperial council, where it was amended and finally tabled.

"I then begged an audience of Emperor Nicholas. He received me in his castle in the Crimea. He listened to me patiently. He was impressed with my recital that most of the revolutionary and Socialist excesses were committed by drunkards, and that the Sveaborg, Kronstadt, and Sebastopol navy revolts and the Petrograd and other mutinous military movements were all caused by inebriates.

"Disappointed at not having been able to get through a government bill regulating this evil, I had abandoned my seat in the duma. It was evident that the bureaucracy had been able to obstruct the measure. Minister of Finance Kokovsoff regarded it as a dangerous innovation, depriving the government of $500,000,000 yearly without any method of replacing this revenue.

CZAR GETS NEW MINISTER.

"While I lobbied in Petrograd the emperor visited the country around Moscow and saw the havoc of vodka. He then dismissed Kokovsoff, and appointed the present minister of finance, M. Bark.

"Mobilization precipitated the anti-vodka measure. The grand duke, remembering the disorganization due to drunkenness during the mobilization of 1904, ordered the prohibiiton of all drinks, except in clubs and first class restaurants.

"This order in one month showed the Russian authorities the value of abstention. In spite of the general depression caused by the war, the paralysis of business, the closing of factories, and the interruption of railroad traffic, the people felt no privation. Savings banks showed an increase in deposits over the preceding month and over the corresponding month of the preceding year. At the same time there was a boom in the sale of meats, groceries, clothing, dry goods, and house furnishings.

MONEY GOES FOR NECESSITIES.

"The $15,000,000 a day that had been paid for vodka were now being spent for the necessities of life. The average working week increased from three and four days to six, the numerous holidays of the drinkers having been eliminated. The efficiency of the worker was perhaps doubled.

"Women and children who seldom were without marks showing the physical violence of the husband and father suddenly found themselves in an undreamed of paradise. There were no blows, no insults, and no rough treatment. There was bread on the table, milk for the babies, and a fire in the kitchen.

"I organized delegations to present petitions to the proper authorities for the prolonging of this new sobriety for the duration of the war. This step found favor with his imperial majesty, and an order was issued to that effect. Another similar campaign to remove the licenses from privileged restaurants and clubs was successful, and strong liquor is no longer available anywhere in Russia."

A national school of telegraphy is to be established at Panama.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

AT ONE STROKE OF THE PEN.

LITTLE sympathy exists in our day with the form of monarchy which still obtains in Russia. To conceive of one man as the undisputed master of nearly two hundred millions of people is to return in thought to the middle ages.

Yet even in so belated a form of government there are certain possibilities of good which the world is able to recognize and approve.

At a single stroke of the pen Alexander III emancipated all the serfs in his vast empire, a deed so far-reaching that it was the astonishment of his generation.

Perhaps it would have taken long years in a more democratic land to reach through education the stage at which the conscious need of that great act of liberation was felt.

Last week there came the astonishing news of another act of arbitrary authority by which at a single stroke of the pen the entire business of making and selling vodka in the Russian empire was prohibited. The vodka traffic in Russia had reached enormous proportions, and its unwholesome effects upon the people were everywhere apparent. Yet no one thought of so drastic a measure for its suppression.

The war has brought that about. A nation cannot fight half drunk and half sober. Even the enormous revenues derived by the government from the sale of vodka have apparently weighed not at all in the settlement of the question. The imperial government recognizes that no monetary compensation is worth considering when the efficiency of the nation is at stake.

Without yielding for a moment one's sentiments of abhorrence at the thought of this terrible war, it is still possible to find satisfaction in an act which the war has prompted. Future generations will be profoundly thankful that as a war measure Russia has been freed in this single act from the degrading and fatal effects of the traffic in strong drink.

It is another great country added to the list of those that are going dry.

A BRILLIANT DISCOVERY.

SOMEHOW our argumentative contemporary, the Christian Evangelist, has gotten the notion that there is a great conflict on between "loyalty" and "fraternity." And it has been engaged for several weeks in a supreme effort at "harmonizing" them.

Nobody ever thought of the "conflict" before and so nobody seems to have thought of the perfectly obvious plan of reconciling them. The plan has been "more than once suggested" by the Evangelist, but still it has been "overlooked" by the public.

Concretely, it seems that loyalty and fraternity are in conflict in the relation of Disciples churches to "other Christian bodies." "The condition of things out of which most frequently arises the problem of harmonizing loyalty and fraternity is the removal of members of one religious body to a community where such body has no church."

What shall be done under such strained circumstances? The answer is set forth in the leading editorial of our contemporary as its own great discovery:

> Let those members who are removing to a community where there is no church of their own take with them a letter of introduction from their pastor, stating their religious connection and character, which these members can present to the minister of any church they wish to attend. This letter might be read from the pulpit by the minister, who would state that these persons are introduced as members of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist or Chrisian Church, at such a place, who desire, having moved into the community where there is no church, that they wish to be considered not as changing their denominational connection or religious affiliation in so doing. If, at any time, these persons should undergo such change in their religious convictions as to feel it their duty to dissolve their connection with the body of which they have been members, and to become associated formally with the church with which they have been worshiping, it is, of course, their privilege to make the change.

The extraordinary brilliance of this scheme is somewhat clouded by one's amazement at finding it in a newspaper representing the Disciples of Christ. Where, in the New Testament, one might be permitted to ask, do we find any "thus saith the Lord" or any approved precedent for such a procedure?

And, pray, what "change in their religious convictions" is it necessary for a Methodist or Presbyterian Christian to undergo in order to "become associated formally" with a church of Christ?

The New Testament exhorts us "that we receive each other as Christ has also received us, to the glory of God." Thomas Campbell declared this to be one of the two great truths of Christian unity, the first and fundamental truth being our personal union with Christ. He says: "How to love and receive our brother as we believe and hope Christ has received him and us, and yet refuse to hold communion with him, is, we confess, a mystery too deep for us. If this be the way that Christ has received us then woe be unto us."

There are over a million Disciples of Christ waiting for some one to give them one hint of a reason why they should refuse to receive into their fellowship any person whom Christ has received into his Church.

"RELIGIOUS BODYISM."

WAS there ever a more repugnant phrase coined? Take it into your mouth, dignified reader, and try to say it. It is a phrase not for the tongue or the lips but for the whole cheek!

Our maledictions fell upon the head of its inventor when we came across it for the first time in the Christian Standard last week. The Standard claims that the chief menace to the continuance and consummation of the Disciples' mission in the world is this very "religious bodyism." We are taking our place, it says, beside "other religious bodies," and aping their ways, instead of continuing to be just a simple, non-sectarian group of churches of Christ untrammeled by the denominational order.

That, of course, is The Christian Century's well known diagnosis of the case. But this linguistic atrocity, "religious bodyism," we are not responsible for.

Yet, upon reading an editorial last week in our St. Louis contemporary, the Christian Evangelist, we are strongly inclined to make a silent apology to the Standard for all the mental maledictions we heaped upon its editor's head.

Where, in Disciple literature, can one find so brash and crude a case of this very "religious bodyism" as the following:

> Again, such a practice [the practice described elsewhere on this page under the heading "A Brilliant Discovery"] would cultivate the spirit of fraternity and good will among the various religious bodies. It is doing unto others as we would have others do unto us. No religious body likes to lose its members from its fellowship because they change their geographical location. The plan that offers them religious privileges without requiring a change in their ecclesiastical relations, would meet with the approval of all.
> No religious body, perhaps, has suffered more than our own through the loss of members by their removal to localities where we have no church, and who find themselves confronted with the alternative of severing their connection with the religious movement with which they are in deepest sympathy, or of remaining without a religious home. We would be grateful to any church who would treat such members in the way we have suggested, saying to them, "Make yourselves at home among us, without any change of your religious connection, unless there should be a change of your religious convictions." We believe other religious bodies would be equally grateful to us for such treatment of their members. This is a far more generous and liberal course towards other religious bodies than to modify our conditions of church membership to receive members from other bodies who have a different baptism or a idfferent creed.

The Christian Century can not be honest with its readers if it does not here declare that it belongs to no such religious body as the Evangelist evidently has in mind when it thinks of the Disciples, nor do we intend to belong to such a religious body.

MR. TAFT IN CHICAGO.

DURING the past week Ex-president William Howard Taft, now Kent Professor of Law in Yale University, delivered a course of three public lectures at the University of Chicago. His theme was "The Executive Power," and though the subject does not seem very interesting at first thought, the lectures proved exceedingly popular.

Mandel Hall was completely filled each day. People came from all parts of the city to hear the distinguished speaker. Nor was it alone the fact that he is an ex-president that gave him such a hearing. Mr. Taft possesses great personal attractiveness. His appearance is prepossessing. His voice is clear and musical. His fund of humor is unfailing, and the lectures, which were read, were interpersed with frequent bits of anecdote and pleasantry which kept the audiences alert.

Mr. Taft's treatment of his theme was dignified, and absolutely free from any suspicion of party bias or personal malice. His praise for Democrats like Grover Cleveland and Woodrow Wilson was generous and genuine.

His references to Mr. Roosevelt were often humorous, but never mordant. And his brief and telling character sketches of public men, from Washington and Jefferson to Champ Clark and Joe Cannon were timely and illuminating.

The experience of such a man as Mr. Taft affords grounds for some pertinent criticism of popular ideas regarding presidents. And these strictures upon custom and precedent were given frankly and convincingly. Such subjects as the legislative powers and responsibilities of the man who is popularly supposed to be only an executive; the enormous burden and danger of an almost unlimited appointing power; the uses and limitations of the veto; the personal side of the president's life, in relation to his associates, to congress and to the people—all were discussed in a manner to disclose Mr. Taft's exalted conception of the presidential office and his jealousy of any innovations which may lower in any regard the dignity and worth of the greatest position within the gift of any nation.

CLOSER APPROACHES TO CHRISTIAN UNITY.

REAL satisfaction is felt by all Disciples of Christ over the work of the Commission on Christian Unity. It puts emphasis and effort upon a cause very dear to all of our hearts. It makes evident in some measure the sincerity of our century-old plea for a reunion of the people of God.

No one is able to prophesy how far the work of the Commission and kindred bodies representing the denominations may carry in the promotion of that unity for which the followers of Jesus ever pray. The most optimistic cannot see in the near future the signs of fulfillment, for denominational traditions and prejudices are strong, and, unhappily, a very considerable body of denominational tradition has grown up among the Disciples themselves.

But there is a simpler form of Christian unity which is going on all the time much closer to the earth than even the best of these admirable efforts making to educate the Church as a whole. While our peace commissions and unity conferences are creating an atmosphere of brotherliness and good will, churches are actually uniting in many places in the effort to solve the local problems of Christan co-operation.

It is this humbler work of actually taking seriously the program of Christian unity which is most of all heartening. For two congregations belonging to different denominations to defy the long traditions of separatism and to unite for the purpose of more effective work in any community, is to realize already, to that extent, the Saviour's prayer.

UNITY ON LOCAL FIELDS.

AS yet these unions, numerous in the aggregate, are comparatively few. But the signs point to a rapid development of union sentiment through the ministries of the higher type of religious journalism and through home missionary literature and effort.

It is not improbable that within a few years the movement may take on very aggressive form and precipitate itself in hundreds of communities where now it is only remotely contemplated.

Of course such a tendency always meets the strong opposition of denominational sentiment and leadership. Little sympathy is likely to be shown where there is danger of losing a congregation from the denominational list. It is at this point that denominational integrity makes its protest.

But Christian unity means ultimately the disappearance of denominations, and cannot tarry at the crossings where denominational warnings are placed. It is far more important that the religious interests of a community should be promoted than that any two or three inefficient and struggling congregations should be saved a few years longer.

The real problem of Christian unity is to be solved ultimately on this simple ground of local Christian co-operation. We can not wait for platforms, conventions and compromises, helpful as all of these are certain to be. Nor can we put trust in them as the means of bringing about the long hoped-for consummation.

Occasionally union is consummmated between two or more denominations en masse. This is an illustration and proof of the ideal. But in most instances Christian unity comes from the ground upward, through the activity of local churches. And it is at this point that one can always work at the problem without waiting for any ecclesiastical action.

MILITARISM.

COMMENTING on the European war, Norman Hapgood, editor of Harper's Weekly, tells the following pathetic story:

When I was a small boy I possessed a 36-caliber six-shooter. This weapon made a strong impression on my imagination. I had day dreams of what heroic feats I might perform with it. One day my Newfoundland dog developed a skin disease. He was an old and valued friend but the gardener said he ought to be shot. I had no reason to suppose the gardener knew anything about it. I was afraid, however, that if I delayed action, the dog might be killed otherwise and I lose the opportunity to try my revolver. I went up stairs, got my revolver, found the dog asleep and shot him in the head. The bullet glanced, and I shall never forget the look of reproach he gave me as he howled and slunk away. The die was cast then and I had to finish the job. Scarcely has a month passed in all the years since then that I have not remembered this deed with horror. It was not that I was cruel. It was that my mind was affected by the pistol.

Human nature is the same in boyhood and manhood and nationhood. The psychology of militarism has not been better illustrated than in this reminiscence.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF THINGS.

A FAVORITE subject for convention addresses nowadays among Disciples is "the spiritual significance" of this or that. Probably the most impressive address at Atlanta last month was on the "Spiritual Significance of the Men and Millions Movement."

Into this Movement has gone a vast amount of prayer. It is a money-getting movement, and it is a life-getting movement. It is therefore a spiritual movement.

Those who engaged in the "campaign" in Texas came away testifying with such gratefulness to the spiritual uplift of the whole experience that one almost forgot to ask about the hundreds of housands of dollars they secured. The possibilities of great spiritual growth that lie before the Disciples of Christ make one of the most heartening features of their outlook.

If Christian unity can be translated out of dogmatic and organizational terms into the terms of a catholic spiritual fellowship the Disciples plea for unity will take the world.

How to Study the Community.

The Commission on Church and Social Service of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has prepared a booklet which is a guide for community survey and which is being circulated wherever there is demand for it. It is adapted not only to city neighborhoods but also to villages. The work is laid out in such way that enterprising communities may come to understand both the social and religious forces at work and may come to assess the successes and failures at their true value.

Evangelistic Committee in New York.

The annual meeting of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City was held at the residence of Mrs. John S. Kennedy on the evening of Nov. 24. Stephen Baker, chairman of the General Committee, presided, and addresses were made by Rev. Arthur J. Smith, D. D., superintnedent of the work; by Rev. A. F. Schauffler, D. D., chairman of the executive committee and by various workers. During the past year 2,443 meetings have been held in ten languages. The aggregate attendance was 613,437 men, women and children. The nationalities reached were Hungarian, Bohemian, Slovak, Italian, Swedish, German, Spanish, Chinese and English.

Change the Name Unitarian?

The American Unitarian Association has a commission at work upon the matter of a proposed change in the denominational name. They received an overture from the annual meeting of the First Congregational Unitarian Church of Detroit deploring any effort to change the denominational name on account of the history associated with it. It is not known yet just what action the commission will take with regard to the proposed change of name.

Harvard Gets Manuscript.

The song "America" was written by Rev. Samuel Francis Smith, D. D., who was a member of the Harvard class of 1829. The manuscript of the song has been in the possession of his son but it was recently given to the college library at Harvard where it will be preserved. The song is attacked by Roman Catholics in some quarters but continues to be our favorite national song.

Bouck White Wishes a Debate.

One of the most widely read books of the season is "The Call of the Carpenter" by Bouck White. The author of the book has been in jail for five months for disturbing the peace but was released and spoke at Carnegie Hall on a recent evening. He issued a challenge to Dr. Woelfkin to meet him in debate on the subject, "Did Christ Teach that Being Rich is Immoral?" At present the man challenged has issued no reply. Mr. White was imprisoned for a disturbance of the worship at the Calvary Baptist Church in New York.

Congregationalists Study New England.

Feeling that they had not kept pace with the population in which they had begun their work 300 years ago, the Congregationalists of New England organized four years ago what they call the New England Congress. It held its sessions in Boston this fall in the Park St. Church and about 400 delegates were present. The delegates seemed to feel that the reason Congregationalism had not kept pace in New England was to be found in the great increase of immigration and that the church must adapt itself to the immigrant. There were addresses by such eminent leaders as Frank K. Sanders, Charles R. Brown and Frederick Lynch.

Pulpiteer-Humorist Dies.

Robert Burdette is known to the Christian public in several ways. His popular lectures have been given in many churches over the land, especially his "Rise and Fall of the Moustache." He became pastor of the Temple Baptist church at Los Angeles at the age of sixty but in recent years has been doing journalistic work. His funeral was in the Pasadena Presbyterian church, Nov. 22.

Plymouth Church Becomes Institutional.

The historic Plymouth Church of which Henry Ward Beecher was pastor and where Newell Dwight Hillis now preaches, has just dedicated a social building in which various forms of parish activity will take place. The building is the gift of the Arbuckle family which had declined to contribute to the Y. M. C. A. fund on account of their conviction that the social enterprises of the community should not separate the young people according to sex. The new building will house a club room, library, gymnasium, swimming pool, and furnish a place for evening classes in typewriting, shorthand, bookkeeping, dressmaking, millinery, kindergarten and civil government.

Stanton Coit Starts Church in Boston.

Dr. Stanton Coit, an Englishman who has written books on social religion, announces that he will start "The Church of the Republic" early in 1915. The membership fee will be $5 per year and the announcement advertises a book of Mr. Coit in two volumes which sells for $12.50. The new system declares that truth, goodness and beauty are the real God. It also declares "Every nation is the church of its citizens," and "America is the Church of all Americans."

Tour South America for Sunday-school.

H. J. Heinz of Pittsburgh, who is chairman of the World's Sunday-school Association, will head a party of Christian business men who are to tour South America on the Kroonland in the interest of organized Sunday-school work. The party will sail from New York on the 21st of January, 1915, and will stop at Havana and Kingston, then passing through the Panama Canal, will sail down the west coast of South America, stopping at the chief seaports to hold conferences with missionaries and native workers on Sunday-school aims and methods. At Valparaiso, Chile, they will leave the vessel and go by rail across the Andes to Buenos Aires, Argentina, avoiding the sail around Cape Horn and gaining time for a longer stay in Argentina and Uruguay before rejoining the ship for stops at Brazilian ports. Among the members of the party are W. N. Hartshorn of Boston, ex-president of the World's Sunday-school Association, George E. Hall of Plainfield, N. J., member of the Executive Committee of the International Sunday-school Association, Harry Morton of San Francisco; and Frank L. Brown of Brooklyn, joint general secretary of the World's Sunday-school Association.

Missionaries for Fifty-two Years.

On account of Turkey's "holy war," calling upon two hundred million Mohammedans to make war on the Allies, Dr. and Mrs. Watson, for fifty-two years missionaries among the Moslems of Egypt, under the United Presbyterian Board, have been compelled to return to this country. They were married young and spent all their married life upon the field. A reception has been held for them by the United Presbyterian churches of Chicago. The missionaries will return to their field as soon as the war is over.

Ex-President Taft Visits Chicago.

The Congregational Club of Chicago arranged an extraordinary evening recently. They gave a dinner in the Hotel La Salle, at which William Howard Taft, former President of the United States, spoke. There were a thousand guests present. Mayor Harrison, J. M. Dickinson, former secretary of war, and Walter L. Fisher, former secretary of the interior, were among the guests of the evening. Mr. Taft spoke on the war and commended the administration for keeping our country from entanglements.

Chicago Churches Aid the Poor.

Churches of various denominations are co-operating in Chicago to help relieve the unusual distress that exists in this city by reason of the industrial conditions. The Immanuel Baptist Church has distributed a carload of fruit and vegetables that was sent by the churches at Three Oaks, Mich. The Olivet Presbytetian Church has also received generous donations from the country and distributed them in the needy northside district where the Bureau of Charities has some of its most difficult problems.

Movies Show Missions.

In not a few churches the moving-picture machine has been installed but there is still a dearth of film that is suitable for use in the churches. The United Photo-Plays Company of Chicago has sent Dr. George A. Dorsey, curator of anthropology of the Field Museum, on an extended trip through the Orient to secure films of the missionary activities. He is accompanied by two expert photographers and materials for fifty miles of film. He has already sent back two miles of film of the work in Japan.

Bible Study in Public Schools.

Out in Arizona, in a Presbyterian community, the people have undertaken a new kind of experiment in the direction of introducing more Bible study into the community and of relating it to the public school program. The teacher holds a Bible class every morning in the school building before the school sessions proper begin. This is made necessary by the fact that Arizona law forbids the teaching of the Bible in the public school. So far the plan has operated without objection and with conspicuous success.

Conference of Theological Students.

On October 26th, there was a very significant gathering of seminary students in the Presbyterian Board Building in New York City. A hundred men came together from ten seminaries and fourteen denominations. The purpose of the gathering was to consider modern problems affecting the Church, the Immigrant, Industrial Problems, and the City. These were addressed by eminent teachers of the various seminaries and the addresses were followed by discussions. There is a growing sense of unity in the theological seminaries and this meeting is significant of a new era.

Prof. Ross Addresses Church Convention.

The third joint conference of the Universalists and Unitarians of Wisconsin was held at Stoughton Oct. 13-15. Each of the denominations was holding its state meeting and the joint conference is the assembling of the two bodies. Prof. E. A. Ross of the University of Wisconsin was present and gave an address on "The Church as a Moral Power-House." The point of his address was that the work of the church is to generate moral and spiritual power for the social needs of the community.

Church Union in Canada.

The project of uniting the Presbyterian, Congregationalist and Methodist denominations in Canada met somewhat of a set-back in the unfavorable action of the Presbyterians and the matter has had to be re-opened. The General Conference of the Methodists has just adopted a new form of statement which it is thought will meet the objections of certain Presbyterians, and a Methodist committee is appointed with large powers, among these being the power to convene the general conference before another eight years, at which time it would in natural course come together.

Begin "Church and City Week."

William Jennings Bryan, secretary of state, was the speaker at a down-town rally which marked the close of the "church and city" program inaugurated recently at the Hyde Park Presbyterian Church in Chicago, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. Mr. Bryan was in Chicago recently and promised Rev. Edgar P. Hill, superintendent of the Board of Home Missions, that he would speak at the Auditorium Theatre in Chicago, the afternoon of Nov. 29. The "church and city" program provides for the holding of meetings in six centers, two days exclusive of Sundays, being devoted to each center. At the meeting in Hyde Park Church, seven Presbyterian churches united. An exhibit will be held in the Hyde Park Church all day and as planned there will be a program of addresses, folk songs and stereopticon pictures. The exhibit, which will be displayed at each of the centers, consists of maps, charts and photographs prepared as the result of survery of several sections of the city. The work has been under the direction of G. B. St. John of New York. Mr. St. John is director of the religious exhibit of the Panama-Pacific exposition, which opens Feb. 20 in San Francisco. The Chicago exhibit is to be taken to San Francisco, where it will form a part of the national exhibit.

British Methodists Raise Large Fund.

The Wesleyan Methodists of Great Britain have been busy recently raising a special fund for strengthening their missionary work at home and abroad. The amount they asked was $1,300.000, but they have already succeeded in raising $1,417,000.

Many New Churches This Year.

Of the four hundred million of dollars raised in America for various kinds of religious work the past year, forty million was for new buildings. New York leads all the cities with new edifices costing approximately eight million. Chicago ranks second with an expenditure of three million. The Roman Catholics lead in the amount of money spent for these buildings, and the Episcopalians, Disciples of Christ and Presbyterians follow in the order named. The Christian Scientists report a falling off in building enterprise this year. The most marked change in building operation is the passing of the old meeting house and the coming in of a kind of religious apartment house.

Rector Restores Banns.

For many years it has not been compulsory upon an Episcopal rector in this country to read in his church the banns, or notice of approaching wedding. Rev. Harry Masson of the church of the Advent in Louisville, Ky., has restored the custom in his own church voluntarily, because he believes the root of the divorce evil is the hasty and ill-advised marriage.

Pastor for Fifty-six Years.

The Baptist ministers of Chicago held a meeting recently to hear the life story of a minister who had preached for over fifty years. Rev. C. F. Tolman has been in the ministry for fifty-six years. In that time he has served as a missionary in India, as chaplain in a state penitentiary, as director of city mission work and as pastor of many churches. He celebrated his eighty-second birthday recently by preaching twice in a Chicago church.

War's Effect on Religious Work.

There are many ways in which the war is affecting religious work. The missionaries that should have sailed are in many cases detained. Sunday-school workers that have been preparing for the World's Sunday-school Convention in Tokyo next year are looking grave. The Christian Endeavorers were to have held a world convention in Australia, but that has been postponed. The Salvation Army has ten thousand members actually fighting in the ranks and the Army has one of the greatest problems of its history before it this winter. The war has some far-reaching effects religiously, as well as politically and commercially.

Commission Government in Sunday-school.

The Hyde Park Presbyterian Sunday-school is being re-organized in a way to abolish the office of superintendent. The commission form of government of cities is the model of the new order. One of these commissioners has charge of the platform work, another of the teachers, and a third is responsible for the music.

Funds for St. Louis Missions.

The Presbyterian churches of St. Louis are being asked to raise sixty-five thousand dollars during the month of November for city missions. The work is under the direction of the Presbytery and Rev. George W. King is secretary of the committee.

Methodists go to Prayer-meeting.

The "Go-to-Prayer-meeting" week which was proclaimed by Bishop McDowell, brought very encouraging response in Chicago. The daily press reported that the prayer-meeting attendance was increased from one hundred to three hundred per cent.

Bible Scenes in Street Carnival.

The street carnival in many cities has been regarded as a questionable institution so when certain Christian people in Omaha proposed to represent Bible scenes in the approaching carnival, the idea was regarded by some as too bold. Nevertheless floats were made which were designed by Charles Plein. The selection of themes was by Gus A. Renze. Some of the biblical subjects treated were "The Expulsion from the Garden," "After the Flood," "Sodom and Gomorrah," and "Rebekah at the Well." The total effect of this feature of the carnival was regarded as distinctly favorable to religion by those who witnessed the scenes.

Preaching at Ninety-six.

Perhaps the oldest active clergyman in this country is Dr. David Tully of Media, Pennsylvania. He is now in his ninety-sixth year. Since he passed the ninety mark he has housed a congregation in a sixty thousand dollar church home. He preaches regularly at Highland Park Presbyterian Church. The church at Media made him pastor emeritus at eighty but he has shown no disposition to retire.

Dr. Parkhurst and Prohibition.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, the well-known Presbyterian pastor of New York City, whose writings in the Hearst papers have familiarized him to a considerable section of the American public, was quoted in California just previous to the election as being opposed to the prohibition of the liquor traffic in California. A committee of San Francisco pastors has been appointed to investigate these charges.

Here and There

UNDER this heading I hope now and then to call attention to the wisdom of the wise, the follies of the foolish, and the trend of a passing event. Subjects that are of sufficient importance to be noticed, though not to be treated at length, may be focused in a paragraph for the benefit of those who are already flooded with pamphlets, magazines, periodicals, and books. Nothing important may be added to the sum of the world's knowledge, though in some instances we may be able to furnish a few moments' diversion for the busy; in others, we shall perhaps, furnish occasion for the scorn of those who have nothing to learn. Their seriousness will be amusing. But for those who relish the joy of expression this column will be of occasional interest. Some may ask, why speak at all? That question we can't answer. We speak because we are not dumb. If we can provoke a smile now and then we shall feel justified in saying, "Now is the time to subscribe!"

THE HUMOR OF THE TERRORISTS.

It is to be hoped that all our ministers are keeping in touch with the fine literature which the Peace organizations are sending out these days. In the contest between militarism and anti-militarism which is certain to become more and more of an issue in the near future, the ministers are being thoroughly indoctrinated with the principles of peace. The panic which the militarist group are ever trying to induce by telling us of the bogeys that are certain to destroy us has been so often punctured that it has become funny. Panics are promoted that millions for battleships may be appropriated. A peril is so often on the way to America from some hostile port that one might fill a volume of prophetic demonstrations with them, if his time were not otherwise employed. How San Francisco has survived some of these bellumist scares is known only to those who have no interest in incubating them. The "perils" are omniabsent. The Peace literature shows up the campaigns of militarism in this country in a way that must strike the alarmist with the force of a torpedo.

As to the real merits of militarism on the European Continent, which a few men in our country are so frantically trying to emulate, listen to this from Henry Watterson in a recent number of the Courier-Journal:

"The Courier-Journal has asked, have we a Christian religion? Are we Christians? Our answer to the call of suffering man proves us at least to be humanitarians. We mourn with the stricken; we sorrow with the afflicted; we hasten to the rescue and relief of the needy. But which of us—especially who of us in the aggregate—yields to the spell and lives in the image of Him of Galilee? Behold the flames of hell sweeping over three-fourths of Christian Europe! If this be Christianity what is paganism? Truly the Church needs first of all to question, to revise and reform itself. Or, has a single country cut loose from the moorings of faith and the teachings of Christ, dragging the others after in self-defensive holocaust to Satan? All that we can see clearly is that the triumph of militarism means unending war, whence we repeat, Down with absolutism and arbitrary power! To everlasting perdition the Hapsburg and the Hohenzollern!"

In that there is no humor, but every effort to buttress the causes that led to the present war should be received in a Pickwickian sense. Ridicule may be the most effective weapon for those who are obsessed by the spirit of militarism. Panics and spooks are picnics to the peripatetic platform patriot, but when converted into armies and navies are devastation and death to the nations of the earth. Every pulpit should reaffirm without reservation the teachings of Christ on the subject of international peace.

EPHEMERAL JOURNALISM.

If one will run through the pages of the Millennial Harbinger he will discover the bones of a score or more of Echoes, Reviews, Monthlies, Quarterlies, Gospel Heralds, Gospel Mirrors, Trumpets, Advocates, etc., which may serve to warn us from the unprofitable fields of journalism. Two of our journals that have survived the rack of the years were fortunate in having the support of men of wealth. One was and the other is endowed. Why did this brood of journals come to an untimely end? Were they untrue to the plea, were they trying to lead us back to the fleshpots of Egypt? Oh, no; they had a maximum of faith and a minimum of funds. They had plenty of consecration as their pages will show, but no credit whatever, as their graves will show. Were they boycotted because of heresy? Not at all. They were blacklisted because of poverty. Some were edited by men of genius, but genius could not pay printers' wages, printers being human and hungry mortals as all their fathers were. The facts that call for faith are the facts that call for funds in the world of journalism. The just may live by faith, but a religious newspaper cannot.

A CONFESSION OF DEFEAT.

Occasionally a good brother laments the degeneracy of spiritual conditions among the Disciples, and proposes to point out the reasons and to prescribe the remedy. All such efforts should be thankfully received because the intention is to make us better, though if the reasons should not be thought valid, or the remedies palatable, no complaint should be made by the diagnostician. To say that a people are not spiritual is a commonplace, the ever-present shaft in time of need. Every denomination laments unspiritual conditions, and the efforts of some of their most faithful are given to improving them. No matter how high a people may climb in the spiritual life, the height above is infinite as compared with the distance over which they have come. As long as Christians are in the body this complaint will be made.

When we are told that the unspiritual condition arises because we have not emphasized doctrines which for generations have characterized a few disappearing sects, and that in this emphasis will be found the panacea for our ills, we must demur. Are the sects who are still living upon these teachings, many of which are of secondary importance, saintly above all others? We should expect to find them foremost in all good works, setting us examples in benevolent tasks at home and abroad, leavening their respective communities with godliness, and making themselves felt as an altruistic power in the life of the nation. But, as a matter of fact, their influence is waning with the years. They are among those sects whose feebleness compels them to take refuge under the shadow of the doctrine of the "little flock," assuming that while they are few, they are the Lord's own. While the world has passed them by, they assert that they have left the corruption of a world under the dominion of Satan, and doomed to destruction, instead of a pervasive influence among men, theirs is the influence of the recluse. The world is so bad that they must withdraw from it for the saving of their souls. Their hope of the world's conversion is not in the preaching of the gospel to the ends of the earth, but in some catastrophic demonstration that will torpedo the strongest armaments of Satan, and give Christ a chance to do in the age to come what he failed to do in the present age. The whole scheme is a confession of defeat which will fill any people with despair, and make morbid the life of the man who adopts it.

SACERDOTAL CELIBACY.

Those who are interested in the study of this doctrine as it has been developed in the Roman Catholic Church, will find great profit in reading the two volumes under this title by Prof. Henry Lea. It is not a work of the scarecrow variety, but a scientific narration of facts from the most reliable sources concerning this war on human nature. The first edition, if I mistake not, appeared about the middle of the last century, and was pronounced by Lecky to be the ablest historical work that had yet appeared from the pen of an American. It is too impartial and discriminating to be given a place among the salacious literature of our times or any time, though there is in the work a sufficient record of irregularities to satisfy those who have appetites for such things. It is not generally known that for ages the priesthood protested against the unnatural doctrine of celibacy, and that it triumphed only by centuries of legislation and discipline. It is singular that a church which makes marriage a sacrament denies its priesthood the right of marriage. But the triumph of the Vatican was complete in its determination to compel every natural desire and longing to surrender to the service of the church.

TEN MILLION FOR MINISTERIAL RELIEF.

About four years ago the Presbyterian Church began a campaign to raise ten million dollars to aid the needy and disabled ministers. No time was set for the completion of the task, but already upwards of half the amount has been secured. The Presbyterians have long passed the stage in which wise men asked the question: Why didn't the preacher save his money, and then there would be no need of these specil appeals? When the government retires its servants on pensions, in some instances larger than the salary that many preachers have ever received, none think the beneficiaries are objects of charity, that fate being reserved for the heroic and deserving preacher because churches are asked to be as appreciative of him in his old age, as the government is appreciative of the labors of the men who spent their best days in its service.

Woman's Suffrage Advances

Big News of Recent Achievements in the States.

MANY things have happened since this department last discoursed on Votes for Women, and this notice is belated, because the writer has been campaigning for the good cause herself.

First and best is the fact, that at the general election this month, on November 3, suffrage amendments were submitted to popular vote in seven states—Montana, Nevada, North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Missouri and Ohio; Montana and Nevada won by good majorities, and are now added to Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Idaho, Washington, California, Oregon, Arizona and Kansas—making eleven states, and the territory of Alaska, where the women now have full suffrage, and Illinois where they have presidential and municipal suffrage.

THE BLACK SPOT.

The victory in Nevada gives especial satisfaction to the friends of equal rights, because Nevada is wholly surrounded by suffrage states; it was the one black spot remaining in the solid block of white upon the suffrage map. With Montana and Nevada on the right side, we now have all the Pacific and inter-mountain states for woman suffrage. We have ninety-one electoral votes, and more than three million women voters; this makes women factors that will have to be reckoned with at the next presidential election.

While all the returns from the election are not yet available, it is certain that Colorado, Oregon and Arizona will have women in their legislatures. Mrs. Frances Willard Munds was elected state senator in Arizona, leading the entire Democratic ticket. Miss Marian Towne was made a member of the Lower House in Oregon, and is reported as the only Democrat in that branch of the legislature.

In Colorado, Mrs. Evangeline Heartz was made a representative; Mrs. Helen Ring Robinson is already a member of the Senate; Mrs. Mary C. Bradford was re-elected to the position of State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

LOOKING FORWARD TO THE THINGS BEFORE.

While five states lost their suffrage amendments, yet no one is discouraged; the educational results of the campaigners made them well worth all that they lost, in time, in money, and in effort. In Nebraska the vote was close, and South Dakota made a good and gallant fight.

In four great states, New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and New Jersey, suffrage amendments have passed our legislature, and will be presented to the General Assemblies of 1915 for a second passage; if they are successful, the amendments will be submitted to the people next fall, and already the workers are girding their loins for the conflict.

In the Empire state, the year's campaign was opened in a great mass meeting at Carnegie Hall in New York City on November 6. Every seat and every box was filled, and unbounded enthusiasm prevailed, as some of the foremost leaders in the country spoke. The crowning event of the evening was the appeal of the chairman, Mrs. Chapman Catt, for funds to conduct the coming year's campaign; the response was the splendid sum of $105,619—which the chairman said was $30,000 more than was ever raised at any suffrage meeting in the world before; an encouraging feature was, that the great majority of the amount was given in small sums—$1,000 being the largest single gift. It is said that "money talks"—and when it is remembered how many people of modest means contributed to this magnificent offering for the work in our state, it speaks more loudly for interest in the cause, than the great bequest of Mrs. Frank Leslie, mentioned on this page a few weeks ago.

The Forty-sixth Annual Convention of the National American Woman Suffrage Association is in session at Nashville as this is being written, and a report of its proceedings will be given at an early date.

SUFFRAGE IN THE SOUTH.

A number of states held their annual conventions just preceding the Nashville meeting, and the writer counted it a special privilege to come in touch with the sentiment for the enfranchisement of women in the South at this time. It was said for a long time that the Mississippi River was the "dead line" of woman suffrage, but the victory in Illinois has robbed that taint of its sting; it has been claimed more recently, that the conservative South would never welcome the new doctrine. A sufficient answer to this is the Southern States Woman's Suffrage Conference representing all the states south of Mason and Dixon line, which was held at Chattanooga last week. Both North and South Carolina have recently held their first Equal Rights Conventions and have outlined a vigorous and aggressive campaign for the coming year. The movement in both states is in charge of brilliant and influential women; the wife of an ex-governor of South Carolina organized the First League for Woman Suffrage in the state less than one year ago.

The First Equal Suffrage Convention in North Carolina was held at Charlotte, Nov. 10-11. The president, Mrs. Archibald Henderson, a cultured and beautiful young woman, is the wife of one of the leading educators and historical experts in the South. Charlotte, the place where the McKlenburg Declaration of Independence was framed, was a fit place for woman's declaration of rights, and both speakers and audience responded to the bracing atmosphere.

THE NORTH CAROLINA EQUAL SUFFRAGE LEAGUE.

Before the convention assembled, the principal paper in the town had given generous space and encouragement to the new propaganda. One of the most eloquent ministers in Charlotte preached a convincing sermon on Woman Suffrage the Sunday before. Judge Walter Clark, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, is vice-president of the League, and made a splendid legal argument for the opening number of the meeting, and Dr. Archibald Henderson of the State University, spoke on "Why Men Want Votes for Women."

But though the women were thus backed by the press and the pulpit, by representatives of law and learning, yet they proved themselves well able to stand alone. The leaders of the movement were largely young women, and I have rarely seen a more alert and well-poised group. They reported, as the result of this, less than a year's work, fourteen auxiliary leagues in the state, with about five hundred members. Their resolutions, which were to be framed later into a platform for the League, showed a fine appreciation of the great lines of social service of our day. They condemned intemperance and its contributing causes. They deprecated war, and pled for peace. Child labor is a burning question in both the Carolinas, the great cotton mill section of the South, and they pledged themselves to work for "the passage of such humane laws as are recommended by the National Child Labor Committee."

THE SOCIAL EVIL CONDEMNED.

In their resolution condemning the social evil, they urged "our members and all thoughtful men and women to openly express their disapproval and disgust at the existing immoral districts, disreputable houses and unscrupulous persons in our commonwealth and to exert every effort to rid our state of this 'canker eating at the heart of the nation.'"

Though the cause was so young in the state, a legislative committee was formed, whose special task for the year was to canvass every member of the legislature of 1915, and to work to secure the passage of a Constitutional Amendment, giving full suffrage to the women of North Carolina.

Altogether, it was good to be in such a fine and spirited atmosphere, and to feel, as the racing train left Mecklenberg and King's Mountain and Cowpens far behind, that the ideals of the old heroes who fought those battles of long ago, still lived in their progressive and courageous daughters.

"THE LADIES' AID."

"The old church bell had long been cracked,
  Its call was but a groan;
It seemed to sound a funeral knell.
  With every broken tone.
'We need a bell,' the brethren said,
  'But taxes must be paid;
We have no money we can spare—
  Just ask the Ladies' Aid.'

"The shingles on the roof were old;
  The rain came down in rills;
The brethren slowly shook their heads
  And spoke of 'monthly bills.'
The chairman of the board arose
  And said, 'I am afraid
That we shall have to lay the case
  Before the Ladies' Aid.'

"The preacher's stipend was behind;
  The poor man blushed to meet
The grocer and the butcher as
  They passed him on the street;
But nobly spoke the brethren then:
  'Pastor, you shall be paid!
We'll call upon the treasurer
  Of our good Ladies' Aid.'

'Ah!' said the men, 'the way to Heaven
  Is long and hard and steep;
With slopes of care on either side,
  The path 'tis hard to keep.
We cannot climb the heights alone;
  Our hearts are sore dismayed;
We ne'er shall get to Heaven at all
  Without the Ladies' Aid.

Vachel Lindsay's New Books

BY EDGAR DEWITT JONES.

Vachel Lindsay (please omit the Nicholas from this time on) the poet from the state capital visited us in Bloomington last spring, and, after the fashion of that great chieftain of the long ago, "he came, he saw, he conquered." Or, let us paraphrase it thus: Vachel Lindsay came, we heard, and he conquered. In the few months since that visit, this poet, Lindsay, has gone his conquering way and his audiences are larger now by far, and his constituency cordial and widespread.

Mr. Lindsay is fortunate enough to have two books off the press about the same time, and from the press of different publishers at that. The Mitchell-Kennerley Company of New York, publishers of his first volume, now bring out his "Adventures While Preaching the Gospel of Beauty." There are six chapters in the book which tell of the poet's long tramp throughout the West, through Missouri and Kansas, and his preaching all the while the "Gospel of Beauty."

This is a most readable little volume. Part of it is of the diary style and records his trampings through the day, his stopping at houses and asking for work so as to earn his meals, the conversations that ensued, and various other happenings. Nearly every page of this volume is alive with chatty, intimate accounts of Mr. Lindsay's experiences tramping through the West. He had some amusing experiences and some that were not so amusing.

He tells us that in the town of Belton, Kansas, he gave an entertainment at the hotel on the promise of a night's lodging. He slept late, and in the morning over his transom he heard the following breakfast-table talk: "That was a hot entertainment that young bum gave us last night," said one man. "He ought to get to work, the dirty, lazy loafer," said another. Then the landlord spoke up: "After the show was over I came pretty near not letting him have his room. All I have to say is he does not get any breakfast." Mr. Lindsay says that he made a grand exit from that hotel. "Yet," writes he, "in plain language" these people 'got my goat.'"

"THE KALLYOPE YELL."

Scattered through this volume, here and there, are some good verses. The one on Kansas, which, if my memory serves me aright, Mr. Lindsay read for us in his Bloomington evening at the Public Library, appears in this volume, also, his "Kallyope Yell," one of the poet's realistic pieces of rag-time rhyme. This poem Mr. Lindsay read to our high school students and was most vociferously received.

I observe also, in this little volume, his lines on "The Road to Nowhere" and "Here's to the Spirit of Fire," "What Grandpa Mouse Said," "The Shield of the Faith," and still other fragments of verse. I think Mr. Lindsay's admirers will greatly enjoy this volume and be entertained by every page, and also amused and entertained by the poet's experiences tramping, not through Georgia, but through Missouri and Kansas.

The second volume by Mr. Lindsay is off the Macmillan press and contains his great and most extraordinary poem, "The Congo," and many other new productions.

"THE CONGO."

"The Congo" is a study of the Negro race, first in their basic savagery, then in their irrepressible high spirits, and lastly in the hope of their religion. "The Congo," though bizarre in its verse and rhythm, is a psychological study at once Vachel Lindsay, who has two new books from the press.

profound and prophetic. Listen to this weird message, which the poet informs us should be read like "the wind in the chimney."

"Listen to the yell of Leopold's ghost
Burning in hell for his hand-maimed host.
Hear how the demons chuckle and yell
Cutting his hands off down in hell."

"The Santa-Fe Trail" which was one of Mr. Lindsay's most popular readings in our town is in this volume. Then there are also some poems that are very new. In fact seven are included under the title of "War, September 1, 1914." One of these, entitled "Abraham Lincoln Walks at Midnight," I have liked so well that I am including it in full, as follows:

"It is portentous, and a thing of state
That here at midnight, in our little town
A mourning figure walks, and will not rest,
Near the old court-house pacing up and down.

Or by his homestead, or in shadowed yards
He lingers where his children used to play,
Or through the market, on the well-worn stones
He stalks until the dawn-stars burn away.

A bronzed, lank man! His suit of ancient black,
A famous high top-hat and plain worn shawl
Make him the quaint great figure that men love,
The prairie-lawyer, master of us all.

He cannot sleep upon his hillside now.
He is among us—as in times before!
And we who toss and lie awake for long
Breathe deep, and start, to see him pass the door.

His head is bowed. He thinks of men and kings.
Yea, when the sick world cries, how can he sleep?
Too many peasants fight, they know not why,
Too many homesteads in black terror weep.

The sins of all the war-lords burn his heart.
He sees the dreadnaughts scouring every main.
He carries on his shawl-wrapped shoulders now
The bitterness, the folly and the pain.

He cannot rest until a spirit-dawn
Shall come—the shining hope of Europe free:
The league of sober folk, the Worker's Earth,
Bringing long peace to Cornland, Alp and Sea.

It breaks his heart that kings must murder still,
That all his hours of travail here for men
Seem yet in vain. And who will bring white peace
That he may sleep upon his hill again?"

There are many of the poems in this new collection of Mr. Lindsay that I should like to call attention to had I the space, but I think I have set down enough in these paragraphs to let many of our poet's "Century" admirers want to own his latest volume. The introduction to this collection is written by Miss Harriet Monroe, and sets forth convincingly certain critical appreciations of Mr. Lindsay's art.

Illinois and the middle-west may well take pride in Vachel Lindsay. Long ago it was written "Westward the star of empire takes its way." Now it is being written, "Westward the star of Poesy scatters far its light."

First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

TWO RECENT BOOKS.

The Problem of Lay Leadership. By Ernest Eugene Elliott. This little volume, a companion to the author's "Making Good in the Local Church," presents a series of opportunities and programs for Christian laymen. Among these problems are those of the city, the country, the church, society, Bible study, missions, stewardship of the boys' work. In each a certain number of questions are presented for discussion and a bibliography follows. Perhaps these bibliographies are a little too extended and not quite definite enough, but they afford opportunity for choice of some of the best books on the different themes. Mr. Elliott's help will be recognized by all who are interested in developing the life of our churches. (Revell. 50 cents net.)

The Young and Field Literary Readers. By Ella Flagg Young and Walter Taylor Field. The third and fourth books of this admirable series have just appeared. They are the joint work of two skilled educators and literary workers. They reveal excellent adjustment of literature to the advancing stages of the child, and embody some of the most important and permanent literature in the language, including some of the Grimm stories, Indian traditions, fragments from Stevenson, Eugene Field and Hans Anderson, as well as narratives from the Bible, from history and from the literature of other nations. Poetical selections are not neglected in these excellent readers. (Ginn & Co. 50 cents.)

Disciples Table Talk

Jesse P. McKnight Leaves Pasadena.

Jesse P. McKnight has offered his resignation at the First Church in Pasadena. The Wilshire church in Los Angeles which is losing F. W. Burnham on December 1, has issued Mr. McKnight a call and it seems probable that he will accept. He organized the Wilshire church while at the Magnolia avenue church in days gone by. There have been seventy-five additions to the Pasadena church the past year. The pastor has officiated at twenty-seven funerals and eleven marriages. He has made 715 pastoral calls. The church raised during the year $11,000 for all purposes.

E| L. Powell Growing Stronger.

The many friends of E. L. Powell of the First Church in Louisville, were deeply grieved at the time of the national convention at the report of his serious illness and operation. It is now authoritatively reported that he is on the high road to recovery and is growing stronger every day. He will resume pulpit duties in the First Church on November 29.

Pastor Allen Explains Survey.

Frank Waller Allen of First Church, Springfield, Illinois, has been engaged as one of the lecturers at the social survey exhibit to be held in that city beginning this week. This survey is conducted under the Russell Sage Foundation and will be the most comprehensive ever made in this country. The sewers of the city will have to be changed to provide for better health standards. It will require five years to change the school system to meet the new requirements. Most of the public activities of the capitol city will be remade on account of the new facts that have been brought to light. Prominent among the lay workers in this movement is Mrs. Hugh Morrison of the First Church.

Grand Master a Disciple.

The Odd Fellows, Rebekahs and Encampments of Illinois have just held their annual state meeting in Springfield, November 17-19. The Grand Master of this order for the past year, and the presiding officer at the recent Springfield meeting was Frank Darnall who is a layman in our church at McLean, Ill. The new superintendent of the Odd Fellows Home for the Aged at Mattoon, Mr. Sayler, is also a Disciple.

A Ten-year Pastorate.

Joseph W. Hagin on November 15 finished ten years of service as pastor of the Madison Avenue church in Covington, Ky. At the beginning of his ministry, he found the church in an old property poorly located. Today the beautiful $60,000 property on Madison Avenue is one of the most conspicuous buildings in Covington, and has few superiors among our new churches anywhere. This congregation is hoping to be a Living-link soon in both the Home and Foreign societies. The Sunday-school is continuously on the records as a Front Rank School. The membership of the church includes some of Covington's most prominent men and women. There have been seventy additions the past year, and at present the church is in a revival with W. T. Brooks leading. Mr. Hagin is with one exception dean of the churches of Greater Cincinnati. He is a member of the board of trustees of the American Christian Missionary Society and also a member of the Bible-school committee of the society.

Louis R. Patmont Gets Divorce.

The latest news from Louis R. Patmont is that he has sued his wife for a divorce in the Portage County Circuit Court of Wisconsin and a decree has been granted him. The suit was not contested by the wife. Mr. Patmont was given the custody of his children. He was married in 1907. He is known to the public through his work as a temperance lecturer and his mysterious disappearances on several occasions. He has also been a Polish mission worker and a staff writer for a church paper.

The proceeds of the entertainment were to be given to Flanner House, a social settlement. There was a ticket selling campaign in which twenty-one children were entered. There were some large prizes but various children were working to be in "the prize line" of fifty children who had sold $2 worth of tickets.

The women of Ann Harbor, Mich., who are connected with the Disciples' church of which Mr. Knepper is pastor, are keeping their twelve sewing machines busy in the basement of the church making little dresses for the orphaned children of Belgium and Albania. Two hundred garments have been completed already and are hung on a line in the church to indicate the progress that has been made. The pastor asks the men for money and the women for work. The price of three hundred dresses was given at November 15 services. A member of the faculty of the state university has given the price of a hundred dresses. When six hundred garments are finished, they will be shipped.

Annual Report of Foreign Society.

One of the most interesting documents appearing this year in explanation of religious work is the annual report of the Foreign Society. It is contained in the November number of the Missionary Intelligencer. The report is no mere bald statistical statement but is full of interpretation and helps greatly in visualizing the activities of the missionaries on the various fields. Each missionary is mentioned by name and his or her activities noted.

Church Extension Fares Well.

War times do not seem to make any difference with church extension. The churches in their annual offering which is just closing have exceeded their last year's record. Loans have been promised to South Park church in Los Angeles, for $4,000; Findlay, O., for $7,500; Ensley, Ala., for $5,000; and Williamson, W. Va., for $4,000.

Bruce Brown Helps Temperance.

Bruce Brown has been active in the temperance campaign in California this fall. He has just closed a meeting at Ontario, Cal., and he will make headquarters in Los Angeles henceforth. He is invited by the state board of southern California to continue his evangelistic work another season.

Dr. Thomas State Superintendent.

In the recent election in Nebraska, Dr. A. O. Thomas, a stalwart member of the church at Kearney, and until recently president of the Kearney State Normal School, was elected to the position of Superintendent of Public Instruction in Nebraska. Dr. Thomas is a western educator, and a man of unusual executive ability.

Preaches in a Theater.

Edgar W. Allen, pastor of the church at Auburn, N. Y., has engaged the Jefferson Theater for the winter and will preach there every Sunday night. Last winter, his theater meetings had an average of 1,200 people present every meeting. At the first meeting of this season, there will be stereopticon pictures of Constantinople and a sermon on the subject, "What Are We to Think About the Bible."

Women Make Thousand Calls.

The women of the church at Auburn, N. Y., made a thousand calls in two days, on Tuesday and Thursday following November 15. Every woman in the church was enlisted and to each woman was assigned six calls. On the evening of November 22, the church required an admission fee to the evening service, some fruit or vegetables, to be given to the poor of the city.

Stereopticon Pictures of Missions.

Both our Home and our Foreign societies are co-operating in a union lantern slide service by which the cause of missions both at home and abroad may be presented "through the eye gate." These have been gotten together by the United Missionary Campaign and there are fifty sets with the accompanying lectures. There are depositaries in the various large cities of the country. The Chicago depositary is at 19 LaSalle street, in the office of the Missionary Education Movement. Some of the lectures are, "Social Aspects of Foreign Missions," "The American Indian," "The New Era in Asia," and "The New Home Missions." The slides can be secured of either our Home or Foreign Society.

John Ray Ewers Closes Meeting.

The series of Decision Meetings, which lasted two weeks, in the East End Christian church, Pittsburgh, closed Sunday, November 15. There were thirty-two additions, making 170 precisely who have united with the church since January 1. The meetings were announced as quiet, dignified and spiritual, and the attendance was the largest in the history of the church. Paid advertisements were put in the seven metropolitan dailies. The publicity obtained for reports of Mr. Ewers' sermons was truly remarkable. Elegantly printed announcements were mailed out to a selected list and also were mailed out by the members of the church. All of the sermons were preached by the minister, John Ray Ewers, and all of the work was done by the members, except that a soloist was engaged for the series, whose beautiful singing of the old hymns was most helpful in the creation of a religious atmosphere. The church now has a revised list of nearly 600 names. In the little more than five years of Mr. Ewers' ministry in the East End, 481 members have been received. This group now comprises one of the choicest societies in our communion. Many of the leading people of the city are members of this church. Plans are in the making for a new church building to cost about $125,000. This building will be unique in architecture among churches and will be open constantly to administer to the needs of the community. The congregation is united and happy and has its face to the dawn.

No Alum— No Dyspepsia

Look to the food. Eat heartily of hot breads, hot biscuit, hot cakes, made light and tasty with Royal Baking Powder, and snap your fingers at dyspepsia. It is the tasty, appetizing food that aids digestion.

There is a quality in Royal Baking Powder coming from the purity, wholesomeness and fitness of its ingredients, which promotes digestion. Food raised by it will not distress. This peculiarity of Royal has been noted by hygienists and physicians, and they are accordingly earnest in its praise, especially recommending it in the preparation of food for those of delicate digestion.

Local Pastors Hold Union Revival.

The local pastors of the churches in Erie, Kans., are holding revival services in the various churches with the ministers doing the preaching. The meetings were held a week in the Disciple church. Our pastor in this field is J. D. Bowles. The county Endeavor rally of Neosho County was held in our church November 12.

Bank Cashier Preaches.

L. B. Hotaling who is cashier of a bank in State Line, Lnd., gives part of his time to the preaching of the gospel. He has recently accepted half-time appointments at two churches in Illinois, Alvin and Georgetown.

Drake Man Makes a Discovery.

Seth Nicholson, who graduated from Drake University in 1912 has already distinguished himself in science by the discovery of the ninth satellite of Jupiter. Mr. Nicholson was at Lick Observatory when he made his observations but he made the beginning of his researches while he was at Drake.

Disciples in Nebraska Legislature.

Among the Disciples who were elected to political office in Nebraska in the recent election were Edwin Jeary and Dr. A. O. Thomas, who were given seats in the state legislature. At this election the site of the state university was allowed to remain where it is and woman's suffrage was defeated.

Gymnasium Classes at Fairmont.

The church at Fairmont, Minn., has introduced various features into its program and prominent among them is a church gymnasium. There is a class for business men, one for ladies and other classes for different ages. The equipment is as fine as in many Y. M. C. A. buildings in adjoining cities.

Church-members Help Build.

The First church of Anacortes, Wash., is starting a new building. A great deal of the work will be donated by the members. The building is of the bungalow type of construction. M. Putnam is the pastor.

Bible School Superintendent.

The Bible-schools of Michigan have chosen a new superintendent. C. R. Wolford, until recently pastor of the church at Owosso. He leaves the Owosso church out of debt, and on November 8 there was one confession of faith. J. Frank Green succeeds to the pastorate of this church. Mr. Wolford is from Hiram college and has studied at the Disciples' Divinity House in Chicago.

Our Retired Ministers.

The average pension paid the retired ministers of the Disciples last year was $189. This meager sum was paid to men whose average age was seventy-three years, when they had been retired on account of age, and to men whose average age was fifty when they were retired on account of illness. The average amount of preaching service of these veterans was thirty-three years and the work they did was a total of 3,539 years.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

Miss Sylvia M. Siegfried, missionary of the Foreign Society to the Philippine Islands, is teaching temporarily in the Mission School at Hazel Green, Ky. Her mother has been in poor health, and for this reason Miss Siegfried has not been able to return to the Philippine Islands as she expected and as she desired.

Dr. W. N. Lemmon, who conducts the Mary Chiles Christian Hospital, Manila, P. I., reports for one month twenty-eight surgical operations, thirty-five calls in the city, an increase in the interest in the morning chapel service, and a bright outlook for all the work in Manila.

During the past ten years the number of evangelists and other helpers on the foreign field, under the direction of the Foreign Society, has more than doubled. The number has grown from 312 to 805. Their salaries and other expenses are small, but the large number involves a considerable sum. This form of work ranks with the most valuable that is being done.

Five years ago the society conducted sixty-three schools with an attendance of 4,034; now it conducts 115 schools and colleges with an attendance of 5,494. It can be seen at once that the increase in these schools alone requires a much larger outlay.

During the past six years eighty-four new buildings have been erected on the foreign field by the Foreign Society. This is fourteen buildings per year, or more than one each month for the past six years. These buildings are schools, chapels, homes, hospitals, etc. The need of such buildings was very pressing. They cost a considerable amount of money.

The above facts remind us of the deficit in the general fund which amounted to $48,556, November 1, 1914. This is not because there has been any falling off in receipts. On the contrary, the receipts have increased every year for the past seven years. The total increase in the income of the society in that period is $189,825, or an average increase of $27,117 annually. The deficit is the result of the rapid growth of the work on the fields. It is true that a deficit is not a new thing, although it is a new experience for the Foreign Society. The local churches often find themselves with a debt. The same is true of our colleges and other institutions. Most missionary societies find themselves with a deficit from time to time. We think of one just now with a shortage of $250,000. Very few business concerns that do not carry some debt. They see opportunities to enlarge their business and increase their profits, and hence they venture to take some risk.

We hope to eliminate the above deficit this year, or a very large proportion of it. It will be seen that this amount costs $5,313 interest annually and it hinders the work in other ways. We are cutting down estimates from the fields to the lowest possible point in the hope of reducing the debt. We are making other reductions also. We are doing our best. We do not want to embarrass the work on the fields. We do not want to jeopardize our credit at the banks. The attitude of the managers of the Foreign Society is to keep out of debt when this is paid.

Dr. W. N. Lemmon, 135 Gastambide, Manila, P. I., reports that a little child had been left in the hospital and the mother has not returned. She may have fallen a victim of cholera. And he says: "If any mother of an Aid Society have an over supply of old children's clothes and will send them to us they can be used very acceptably. Small packages can be sent by parcels post."

The church at Huntington, Ind., Elmer Ward Cole, pastor, becomes a new Living-link in the Foreign Society and will therefore support their own missionary on the field. The church is very happy over the advance step. Brother Cole has been with this congregation now six years and a half and a great work has been accomplished. A twenty-three thousand dollar debt has been wiped out, and the church does not propose to remain idle, but takes hold of its regular task, the evangelization of the world.

Secretary Rains, who reports that during the past ten years the number of evangelists and helpers in our foreign fields has more than doubled.

B. L. Kershner writing from Manila, P. I., concerning the hospital work says: "The hospital is a busy place. I have just had four days' experience there, and have had occasion to see the work done. All classes of people receive medical attention. There is scarcely an hour in the day when they are not to be seen sitting in the vestibule waiting their turn. The doctor keeps the religious work well to the front. He has a chapel exercise every morning for nurses, patients, visitors, and all who will attend. On Sundays he does pretty nearly as much religious work as medical."

Sec. Stephen J. Corey, referring to the University of Nanking, says: "The finest institution in China has been built up and it is worth the price and the effort a thousand times." He also says: "The workers out here are staggering under a tremendous burden just now. We have been pleased with the spirit of the China Mission." Again Mr. Corey says in a personal letter: "The great need (in China) seems to be for efficient, well trained native leaders and preachers. The outlook for the next ten years is better than anything before. The doors are open. The people are turning from their temples and gods. China is alert for western knowledge and hungry for the truth. The great wedge now is the school. China's own education system has fallen to pieces. This is sad, but at the same time it gives us a wonderful opportunity."

F. M. RAINS, Secretary.

IN THE THIRD MISSOURI DISTRICT.

District Superintendent J. H. Jones, of the Third Missouri district is rendering a great service in his large and interesting district and he is offering an object lesson which will prove of value to many other sections. In this Southwest or Third district are thirty-one counties with a population of 640,000. Of this population about 150,000 are Protestant Christians and about 15,000 are Catholics. The Disciples have about 220 congregations in this district with a combined membership of 25,000. In twenty-six of the thirty-one counties they have a county missionary organization and hold annual conventions. In only one of these counties are they without a congregation. Twelve or more of the thirty-one county seats are inland towns. In seven of the county seats of this district the Disciples have no congregation. At present Superintendent Jones assisted by Mrs. O. W. Lawrence, state C. W. B. M. Secretary, Mrs. Daniel Bartholomew, District C. W. B. M. President and other C. W. B. M. workers, Dr. C. C. Drummond of India representing the F. C. M. S. and C. C. Garrigues representing the N. B. A. is conducting a series of conventions that includes Wright, Greene, Polk, St. Clair, Vernon, Cedar, Barton, Newton, Jasper, Barry, Lawrence, Stone, Webster, Pulaski, Phelps, and Camden counties. Mr. Garrigues also conducts an Every-member Canvass Conference in each of these conventions. One hour is devoted to this conference in each meeting. Stereopticon views are used in the presentation of the different departments of work represented. The attendance in these conventions is good, the interest very deep and in nearly every county the brethren are definitely committing themselves to the budget plan and the Every-member Canvass.

A SIGNIFICANT CABLEGRAM.

"IN ORDER TO MEET THE DEMANDS UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES DO NOT ALLOW WAR TO INTERFERE WITH OFFERINGS. WE ARRIVED HERE IN JAPAN AND ARE ALL WELL.—Stephen J. Corey, Secretary." The above message came to the office of the Foreign Society early the morning of the 17th. Friends everywhere will be delighted that Mr. Corey and his associates on the commission to the mission fields are well and making good progress. They have already visited the Philippines and China. They will spend a month in Japan. They will sail from Japan for America about December 10, and reach home about January 1. It is clearly seen that the Commission is deeply impressed with the work being done and with the open doors before our people. They are now in the Mikado's Empire, a land of great heathen temples on every hand. Our small force there, the progress that has been made, and the opportunities before us appeal mightily to the hearts and to the imagination of the Commission.

Our Readers' Opinions

THINKS EDITOR CLOUDS BAPTISM.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

You have been clouding the matter of baptism again lately, I see. Your strictures on the ordinance are out of place in a religious journal of the Disciples. Words like these for instance in your issue of October 1:

> "I do not believe the traditional position of the Disciples in making immersion a condition of fellowship is a matter of profound conscience to our people at all. In the heart of us we are ashamed of it. And it is the conflict of pride and shame that makes it a sensitive subject. Our sermons on immersion are to the initiated, becoming more and more perfunctory and hollow. We have no passion for it any more. Our pastors, for the most part, relegate the preaching of it to the imported evangelist. The men and women of our churches are interested in vaster problems, more human tasks, more divine imperatives. And the new spiritual life of the age is making us Disciples ashamed of every formal or technical thing that separates us from any of God's children."

"A formal or technical thing" indeed! You surely do not attach much importance to the Lordship of Him who has ordained this ordinance. You are sorely in need of some one to teach you the very first principles of the Gospel.

Permit me to use an illustration. You write a letter. There is only one page in it perhaps, but you put it in an envelope; it is only a little ink and paper, not worth very much perhaps, but you place a stamp on it—that costs two or five cents—and drop it into a box. Nobody touches it but a sworn official of the government. It goes and no man can hinder it. It crosses the ocean maybe, guarded by all the power of the government and perhaps thousands of miles away, through flood and flame and storm and hindrances of various kinds, that little stamp carries that letter. It has all the power of the government behind it. That little piece of paper is of little account it may be, but when you have the government stamp upon it, you have the government behind it, it goes somewhere. So when a man understands baptism he will never treat it as a light thing. Baptism is that stamp. God has never held any man in esteem who ridiculed his ordinances and made "filthy rags" out of them.

With intelligent Disciples it has never been a matter of "much" water or "little" water. It has been the authority of their Lord. What did he command? Is he Lord over conscience, heart and life? When baptism has the name and power and promise and work and blood of Jesus behind it it is no mere ceremony, Brother Morrison. Yours for the old path to walk in,

Kansas City. JAMES SMALL.

[If Mr. Small will re-read the quotation he makes from The Christian Century he will note that there is not a single reference to baptism in it. The paragraph refers to the physical act of immersion in water. As to baptism itself we agree exactly with the sentiment of Mr. Small's concluding paragraph.—THE EDITOR.]

GOOD CONVENTION MUSIC NOT EASY TO SECURE.

EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY:

I wish to thank you for your words of appreciation of the music of our National Conventions, as expressed in your recent editorial on "Convention Music." Your kind criticism of my personal leadership is gratefully received, for I am well aware that I have not been able to reach, as yet, the ideal I have had before me. I frankly confess my own weakness and apparent inability to place the music of our conventions upon the high spiritual plane that so many of us desire. But there are some other hindrances that I wish you had mentioned in order that justice might be done all concerned.

Upon two occasions I have gone to the convention city, and drilled a large chorus choir, teaching them the newer hymns and tunes that were to be used in the printed program, as well as some standard anthems, only to have them completely disorganized by the members being placed upon local committees that required all their time and strength. This choir, together with volunteers from among the delegates, would have given us the proper material to make the music what we want it to be, from the standpoint of leadership. But I have only been able, so far, to get this choir together for the communion service, which, it is manifest to all, is not the place to teach new hymns and tunes.

Other hindrances might be mentioned negatively. So long as only ten or fifteen minutes are allowed at the beginning of a session, while the audience is still assembling, for the devotional period; so long as the presiding officers say, in effect, "Sing one or two stanzas of some familiar hymn, and let us get the first speaker 'off' on time, for we have some extra speeches to come in" (remember, the program as printed, is already too full); so long as the one who reads the scripture and offers prayer, insists in delivering, in addition, a short sermon, not on the program (I have known some to "talk" twelve and fifteen minutes by the watch); so long as a hymn is used to drown the noise while the doors are opened to permit one crowd to enter, while another passes out; so long as our conventions are held in auditoriums too large, where people cannot hear on account of the noise and imperfect acoustics; so long as the choir members are "worn out" by being upon committees, and so long as the leader must depend upon volunteers wholly, and "picked up" accompanists, that long will our convention music fall short of our ideal.

However, I wish to say, that in looking over the printed programs of the last few years, and in recalling the hymns and tunes actually used, I find a tremendous change for the better. There are some hymns omitted that should be included, and some services not adequately provided for. But as a whole, only the standard hymns and tunes have been used, gospel songs being almost entirely omitted. As a result, our conventions, as I recall them, are far more devotional, and upon a much higher plane spiritually than they were when I first began to attend them some twenty years ago. This change is especially noticeable in the last few years. When we have a convention held under proper environment, with shorter hours, and fewer days, and when every one will come on time, and stay until the close, like those in attendance upon the Student Volunteer Movement, or the Men's Missionary Movement, then, and not till then, can we have an ideally devotional and spiritual convention.

In closing, let me say, that a large number of our singing evangelists are acquainted with the best hymnody and tunes, but they are not able to use them in their work, because of the demands made upon them by the people, and especially by those in authority. Also, there is a place in the work of the church for gospel songs of the better kind, but great care and discrimination should be exercised in making use of them in one of our national conventions.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

BY J. B. BRINEY, IN THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD.

Mr. Morrison wholly misapprehends Mr. Campbell as to the continuity of the meaning of the root syllable of a word. With the remark that the italics are Mr. Campbell's, he quotes as follows: "Wherever the radical syllable ("dip" or "bap") is found, the radical idea is in it."

I do not know the source of this quotation, for no reference is given. The language is found in the Campbell-Rice debate, but not in italics. The statement is taken out of the setting given it by its author, and thus it is given a much wider application than was intended by Mr. Campbell. The context clearly shows that the author is only contemplating derivative verbs from primitives that indicate specific action. As thus limited, the rule has never been overturned.

Our author, in his attempt to overthrow it, says:

> In the case of bapto it has been shown that Mr. Campbell's position expressed so positively in the italicized statement given above is erroneous. This word we have found used as "dye" or "stain" in contexts where no hint of its primary meaning, "dip," is present.

Yes, and a careful reader would have observed that Mr. Campbell himself noticed and dwelt upon this very fact. In the previous article it was shown that Mr. Campbell, while contending that derivative verbs inherit the primary or root meanings of their primitives, do not necessarily retain the figurative meaning of "their natural progenitors." In regard to bapto, he says, "For, as all allow that dip is the primary and proper meaning of bapto, and color, stain, dye, wet, its figurative or secondary meanings," etc. Here Mr. Campbell positively states in italics the very thing with which Mr. Morrison tries to break down his rule!

Mr. Rice seems to have misunderstood Mr. Campbell on this point, and this elicited from the latter the following statement:

> My friend did not seem to understand my criticism on the syllable bap.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR DECEMBER 13.

Matt. 28:16-20; Luke 24:44-49.

Memory Verses, 19, 20.

Golden Text.—Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Mt. 28:20.

American Standard Bible.

Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons. (Used by permission.)

Matthew 28. (16) But the eleven disciples went into Galilee, unto the mountain where Jesus had appointed them. (17) And when they saw him, they worshipped him; but some doubted. (18) And Jesus came to them and spake unto them, saying, All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. (19) Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit: (20) teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.

Luke 24. (44) And he said unto them, These are my words which I spake unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must needs be fulfilled, which are written in the law of Moses, and the prophets, and the Psalms, concerning me. (45) Then opened he their mind, that they might understand the scriptures; (46) and he said unto them, Thus it is written, that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; (47) and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem. (48) Ye are witnesses of these things. (49) And behold, I send forth the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city, until ye be clothed with power from on high.

VERSE BY VERSE.

(From Tarbell's Teachers' Guide.)

v. 16-17. The eleven disciples. A successor of Judas had not yet been chosen.—Unto the mountain where Jesus had appointed them. This evidently refers to some understanding not recorded in the Gospels.—Some doubted. There were others besides the eleven present, though Jesus spoke especially to the latter.

v. 18. All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Compare Rom. 1:4: who was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead; even Jesus Christ our Lord. "The view which dates the glorification of Christ, not from the Ascension, but from the Resurrection, is safely grounded on this passage. It is the view of St. Augustine, of most of the fathers, of Albertus Magnus, of the schoolmen, and of many modern authorities. Westcott says: 'After the Resurrection our Lord belongs already to another realm, so that the Ascension only ratifies and presents in a final form the lessons of the forty days in which it is included'" (Dummelow). "Father Snowden, what was the Son before the Father gave him all power?" some one asked and instantly this African preacher returned "What was the Father after he had given the Son all power?"

v. 19. Go ye therefore. Since all authority has been given me on earth, go ye and make my authority known.—Into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. "One of the leading dogmatic texts of the New Testament, being the nucleus around which the Apostles' Creed subsequently grew. It teaches (1) the Divinity of Christ, for no mere man could thus insert his name between those of the Father and of the Holy Spirit: (2) the unity of the Godhead, for one 'name' or divine nature, belongs to the three: (3) the trinity of persons, for since the former two are Persons, so is the third: (4) the subordination of the coequal persons to one another, viz., the Son to the Father, and the Spirit to both" (One Volume Commentary).

v. 20. And lo. The promise that follows will give them courage for their work.—I am. Not I will be.—Always. Greek, All the days RVm.—The end of the world. The consummation of the age, RVm.

v. 44-49. Either we have here the conclusion of a long discourse not recorded, or else it is Luke's summary of Christ's words during the forty days between the resurrection and the ascension. Mr. Riddle assigns verse 44 to the evening of the resurrection day, verse 45 he deems a summing up of the instruction of the interval between then and the ascension, his "speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God" (Acts 1:3), and verse 46 he considers introductory to the account of the discourse on ascension day, which Luke records more fully in Acts 1:4-8.

v. 44. These are my words which I spake unto you. "These events—death and resurrection—fulfill the words I spoke to you before my death." Or, "these words" summarizes an omitted discourse.—While I was yet with you. Before the crucifixion.—The law of Moses, and the prophets, and the psalms. The Jews divide the Old Testament into Law, Prophets, and Hagiographa, or Writings; the "psalms" stands here for the Hagiographa.

v. 47. And remission. Some ancient authorities read unto. RVm.—Nations beginning. Or, nations. Beginning from Jerusalem, ye are witnesses, RVm.

v. 49. The promise of my Father. The Holy Spirit.—Clothed with. A common figurative expression, clothed as with a garment, an abiding influence. For the fulfilment of the promise see Acts 2.

"I Am With You"

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

"THEREFORE."

There is no reason why we should go. Christ has the authority and the power. No quality is more needed in America in these days than that of living under authority. We have turned freedom into license. We have become laws unto ourselves. We worship at the shrine of the god, "Do-As-You-Please." Discipline, discipline, discipline—that is our supreme need. We have in school what we call disciplines and they are. Every day I believe more in the value of a trained man. There is a reason why college men become leaders. I have been greatly interested in the German idea of the state. It is that individuals exist for the state. Our idea is that the state exists for individuals. Now I believe in democracy for America but I also believe in authority. We run amuck when we do as we please, as we feel. Thus have we become a dancing, frivolous, sensual people. We need to be sobered. Economy and hard work will do us good. We need discipline.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

AUTHORITY.

We are under authority. Christ has the right to tell us to go and we have no alternative. Too long we have held the idea that we could do as we pleased. And then somebody compromised by saying in idle fallacy, "If you can't go, send." Christ never said that! He said, "Go!" You have no right to change his command. No, he said, "Go" and there is no other way. You must go. I must go. All of us must go. Only cowards send substitutes. But it does not mean necessarily in your case that you must go to China. It may mean that and if it does you must go. Every man ought to say, "Now if God wants me to go as a missionary that would be the best way for me to invest my energies and I will go." You see Christ knows best what to do with us. Some of us he wants in the new west. Some of us he wants in the rural communities. Some of us he wants in India. Find out where you are wanted and go. I believe that right now God wants me to go and seek the lost in Pittsburgh and that's what I'm doing. But we are all under authority and all must do the going. Money is a cheap substitute for self. When a man loves his wife he gives her himself; when he gets tired of her he gives her money—only.

"MAKE DISCIPLES."

That is great business. I met a man last Sunday who is constructing a wonderful building. I admire him. It is a great thing to build a bridge, paint a picture, write a poem or a book. But the biggest of big business is to build the kingdom. And mind you that is a bigger job than building up a church! We need to put the emphasis for a few years now on the kingdom. We are to win men, broad-mindedly, to the kingdom of Christ. We are not to make sectarians but Christians. Christianity has failed! Christianity was powerless to stop the war! But the simple religion of Jesus has not failed. It has only been tried a little. Wherever and whenever it has been tried it has worked. Our job is to win men to live like Jesus. And the only way to do that is to live that way ourselves. The torch kindles others.

"TEACH THEM."

This is the day of Religious Education. Churches that can, are engaging men specially trained to head their Bible schools. Education is a long, slow process. It means more than reading a tract. It begins in our homes with parents who take time to love their children into the Way. We must cause our boys and girls to love the truth. It is not enough to know it. God bless the faithful fathers and mothers and those unappreciated people known as Sunday-school teachers. Great will be their reward.

"I AM WITH YOU."

Not alone do we do this. Jesus is with us all the way. He is with the parent, the teacher, the preacher, the evangelist—ALWAYS.

A CHRISTIAN MOTHER.

Mothers will ever be holy,
  But holiest when they believe
Christ in "these little ones" cometh,
  When these in His name they receive.

"Blessed art thou among women,"
  Whose bosom emparadised me!
Sent by the Friend of the children,
  I doubly was welcome to thee.

He said, the Great Son of Mary,
  Who thought on the cross of her need:
"She who My Father's will doeth,
  Lo! she is My mother indeed."

Lord, with what bonds Thou dost bind me;
  My mother, she also is Thine!
Mother! by ties, O! how tender;
  Thy Savior, He also is mine!

According to the census of 1910, the number of women in "domestic and personal service" has increased 25 per cent in ten years.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 9.

(Missionary Meeting.)

Pioneer Studies—Isaac Errett. John 8:31-36; Gal. 51:1-8.

It is a fallacy to reason that because a great religious leader asserted his freedom therefore his followers are free. The leader who valued his own freedom may try to impose upon his followers a new yoke of bondage. Even if he pleads the cause of all men and begs them to be free, those who accept him as a leader may misunderstand him and transform his independent utterances into dogmas not to be examined by free intelligence. Alexander Campbell and his associates were free men in Christ Jesus. They could not make all men free who were greatly influenced by them; they could only give an example of freedom. Moral and religious freedom comes to the man who learns to value truth and goodness for their own sakes and not because they have the impress of authority upon them. When the Disciples became entangled in a yoke of bondage, Isaac Errett arose to preach freedom.

TRIBUTE TO A LEADER.

Isaac Errett was greatly indebted to Alexander Campbell and this debt he gladly acknowledged. That he was not overpowered by the commanding personality of Mr. Campbell to the extent that he lost his independence is clear to all who have studied his career. His word of praise for the man whom he honored is also an announcement of his own right and the right of his brethren to be free.

THE EDITOR.

Isaac Errett served the cause he advocated through the columns of the Christian Standard. He was the founder and editor of this journal. It came into being because there was a "general demand for a weekly paper which should exhibit the apostolic spirit as well as the apostolic letter." In the first issue of the Standard, he writes: "In regard to the general style, tone, and spirit of the paper, we can only say that we have an ideal which we shall strive to realize. We shall seek to be gentle and courteous, but we are determined to be independent. Deference to the counsels of age and experience; respectful attention to the suggestions of friend and foe; suitable regard for honest convictions and prejudices—these we can promise but, after all, our own best convictions must control us. We forewarn our readers that we set out, not to please them, but to please God; to strike sturdily at error and wrong, and to utter freely our honest convictions, on grave and weighty themes, which can only be made profitable by free and manly discussion. We indulge no luxurious dream of pleasing everybody. To all who can respect the frank and courteous utterance of earnest convictions, we expect the Standard to be welcome." He lived up to his promise and discussed issues as a free man with free men.

MISSIONARY LEADERSHIP

Isaac Errett believed in missions and preached missions. He encouraged the women who organized the Christian Women's Board of Missions. He was made president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society when it came into being in 1875. With tongue and pen he taught a gospel for the world. Perhaps this was his greatest service to freedom, for the minds of men cannot be free unless they are occupied with great themes. The slave talks of petty themes in a petty way. He exalts self. Isaac Errett taught his brethren to lose themselves in the cause of a world-wide religion, and to have the freedom of this religion.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM.

I did not, nor do I, argue that words never change their meaning—never depart from their etymological import. Nay, I have often asserted that an almost infinite variety of changes has occurred, and will occur, in the words of all living tongues.

That one man should misunderstand another in the heat of debate is not astonishing; but that a careful reader of the matter involved, in a book in which the mistake was expressly corrected, should misrepresent an author through a misunderstanding, is marvelous. Mr. Campbell was careful to disclaim the very thing that Mr. Morrison attributes to him, and thus makes the great philologist stultify himself!

The crux in our author's argument against immersion is in the assumption that baptism was not a new practice introduced by John under divine direction, but that it was already in existence in the practice of the Jews in making proselytes. There was some excuse for this blunder years ago before historical research had thrown its light upon the subject. The modern and well-established view of the matter is presented by Meyer, the great German exegete, in the following language:

> The baptism of John has been erroneously regarded as a modified application of the Jewish baptism of proselytes. For the baptism of proselytes, the oldest testimony to which occurs in the Gemara Babyl, Jebamoth (46:2), and regarding which Philo, Josephus and the more ancient Targumists are altogether silent, did not arise till after the destruction of Jerusalem ("Commentary on Matthew," p. 77).

One who undertakes to instruct the public should be acquainted with the modern phases of the subjects he handles.

Another baseless assumption made by our author is that, at the time of John, baptism had come to be the name of an initiatory ceremony, and had no reference whatever to action—that it simply meant "initiation," without reference to method.

A more baseless figment than this never was born of the human imagination. There is not an instance of the use of baptizo known to the Greek literature of the apostolic age in which the word did not specifically mean to immerse, and it is significant that our author does not attempt to make out his case by referring to any such instance. Moreover, it is universally admitted that proselyte baptism, when it did come in, was immersion.

With this emphasis upon baptism as anabstract institution of personal obedience, it is not strange that among Disciples and Baptists a ceremony known as the "Right Hand of Fellowship" has been invented to take the place from which baptism has been pushed by this legalistic theory. Lacking its symbolism, the so-called Right Hand of Fellowship comes nearer answering to the baptism of the New Testament than does baptism as interpreted by its legalistic advocates.

The "Disciples" do not hold baptism to be an "abstract institution," and what our author means by "an abstract institution of personal obedience" is a problem that it will require the proverbial "Philadelphia lawyer" to solve. It is certain that baptism is an ordinance that requires "personal obedience." But the most curious thing in this curious jumble of words is the notion that the "Right Hand of Fellowship" has "been invented to take the place" of baptism! The general view of the disciples is that baptism completes the process of induction into the body of Christ or the church in its broadest sense, and that the "hand of fellowship" simply receives one into the fellowship of a local congregation. A tyro in such matters should know this. The term "legalistic" is an earmark of a certain class of writers.

THE CO-OPERATION COMMITTEE.

A mass meeting of friends of The Christian Century held in First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 10, 1914, appointed a committee of six, whose names are appended below, to devise and, as far as possible, carry out plans for the adequate financing of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society. It is now well understood that this Society is a religious corporation, having no capital stock, no private investment and no personal profits. Membership in the Society is issued to churches and Sunday-schools that patronize it, and to individuals who make gifts to its support. Details as to membership will be sent upon application to the office of the Society. The committee is now seeking to secure funds with which to sustain the Society during the next five years while it works out the problem of self-support. We believe this to be one of the most urgent and significant causes now making its appeal to the Disciples of Christ. It is high time that a religious journal representing the finest ideals of our Disciples' history and a publication enterprise entirely freed from the commercial spirit and consecrated to the task of creating a worthy literature to represent and instruct our people should be established by the gifts of those who cherish such ideals. To this end we have asked the editor of The Christian Century and have obtained his consent to set apart this page for the use of the Committee in interpreting its work and in calling upon those of like mind everywhere to make gifts. This page, therefore, is entirely outside of editorial jurisdiction during the period in which the Committee undertakes to carry out the grateful task laid upon it by the Atlanta mass meeting.

A VERY PERSONAL LETTER FROM MR. TRAXLER.

To Friends of The Christian Century:

As chairman of the Co-operation Committee the writer thought it advisable to pay a visit to Chicago, and get into as close touch as possible with matters pertaining to our mutual welfare; therefore three days of last week were spent in such a visit.

During that time several conferences were held with men who are more or less intimately acquainted with the inner workings of the Society; the accounts were also examined; and last but not least some effort was made to feel the spiritual pulse of our brethren in Chicago.

In all of these particulars my hopes were more than realized.

I was prepared to find financial conditions at low ebb; but was rejoiced to discover that even these are better than was expected. The financial end of the work has been a hard struggle but the business is increasing, especially during the past year, in such steady fashion as to assure us of ultimate self-support if sustaining help can be found for a few years.

I found also that friends are responding splendidly to the appeal of our committee.

Space will not permit me to go into all details; suffice it to say that I am more happy than ever that I can have some part in promoting so worthy a journal as The Christian Century.

"A REASON FOR THE HOPE."

As I always desire to have a reason for the hope that is in me, it may not be out of place to call attention to a few of the many things which influence me so favorably towards the work that Bro. Morrison and others are doing.

In recent years I have had considerable to do with the difficult work of our people in England. One of the outstanding features of that experience was the contact with Christians of other communions. How generously they shared with us in bearing the burdens of our church work! This in spite of the fact that our form of government prevented the recognition of them as Christians, standing upon the same high plane as ourselves. Nevertheless our impertinence did not keep them from joining with us in promoting the kingdom of our common Master. Indeed, I believe it would have to be admitted that their loyalty to the interests of the kingdom more than averaged up to that of the "elect."

Again, in the recent attempt to put Ohio "dry" I had the inexpressible pleasure of being associated with the pastors and laymen of other churches. Here I found men filled with the spirit of God and a burning desire to do his will. The harmony which existed, and the work accomplished in this united effort compels a modest "Disciple" to pause for serious meditation. What an outstanding testimony to the possibilities that lie in a united Christian citizenship! Have I ever thought that these temperance workers of Ohio or those loyal yoke fellows of England were not my brethren in Christ? If so, may God forgive my presumption, and accept my solemn vow to do what I can to see the good in other men and to promote the union of all Christians.

A PAPER DEVOTED TO CHRISTIAN UNITY.

Oh friends, how it should fill our souls with joy to know that we have at least one paper which is fully devoted to our plea for Christian union—a paper which inspires us to not only preach union but to practice it.

Sometimes I wonder if God can forgive us for saying that we desire the union for which our Master prayed so earnestly, and then going out to do what we can to prevent it. True, we may have clearer conceptions of some important truths than do our religious neighbors, but on the other hand, they may have a deeper insight than we into some of the vital things pertaining to the Christian life.

I might go on multiplying incidents which would confirm conclusively the significant words of Jesus when he said. "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold," but I must not.

I have only touched upon one phase of the work to which the "Century" has devoted itself so nobly. You know many others.

My purpose in writing is to show you, my brethren, the great duty we all face in common, to come up to the help of this paper at this strategic time. What a tremendous opportunity confronts the people of God, and what a great factor the "Century" can be and will be, in furthering the interests of the kingdom.

A PARAMOUNT DUTY.

I look upon the mission of the "Century" as of paramount importance at this time; and in order that Bro. Morrison may devote all of his energies to the great editorial task so loudly calling for his undivided attention, we, his brethren and fellow-workers, should see to it that the financial end of the business receives proper consideration.

Keeping in mind the constructive policy of the paper what better or what more fruitful field as a missionary enterprise than that of contributing to its success?

I am glad to be privileged to have a share in this great work, and, I believe that many of my brethren will be like minded.

Fraternally yours,

Akron, O. Chas. Traxler.

BETHANY GRADED LESSONS are being adopted by so many of the best schools among Disciples.

1. There is more to them—at least a third more—than is contained in any other series.
2. They are rich, vital and full of suggestion to teacher and pupil.
3. They are free from the sectarian spirit.
4. They are soundly and fervently evangelical.
5. They are truly artistic in all their illustrations.
6. They are printed on better paper with better binding and in better taste than any other series.
7. Every lesson writer is an expert of interdenominational reputation.
8. They are a monument to the modern spirit of unity—several leading denominations have co-operated to produce them and are now using them.
9. The Disciples possess full editorial rights, through the editor, Charles Clayton Morrison.
10. Every Disciple school that uses them participates in and promotes a great Christian union enterprise.

Imitative Tendencies Among Disciples of Christ

IN THE PROSECUTION OF THEIR HISTORIC MISSION THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST ARE MAKING A FUNDAMENTAL MISTAKE IN IMITATING CERTAIN CONVENTIONAL TYPES PREVAILING AMONG THE CHRISTIAN DENOMINATIONS.

The tendency to imitation has become very pronounced among Disciples in the past quarter century. Our earlier consciousness of having a distinctive point of view regarding religion often took on extreme and unsocial characteristics. Our sense of being "a peculiar people" sometimes made us boorish.

But the edge of this self-consciousness has been dulled in these later years and a habit of amiable conformity has settled down upon us. Drawn into co-operative activities with other Christians, and lacking both a literature and a constructive leadership of our own, we have unconsciously fallen in with the ways of thought and work and experience of our Christian neighbors, letting go, meanwhile, many of the structural principles out of which we might have builded a fellowship of the spirit unique and valid, and which would have proved itself a blessing to the world.

This reaction from a distinctive to an imitative ideal may be traced in more than one direction.

In The Christian Century a few weeks ago Dr. E. S. Ames, in an article full of suggestion, showed how the Disciples had gradually adopted from the rest of Christendom the misleading distinctions between the trinitarian and unitarian theologies. The fathers, he pointed out, insisted that they were neither trinitarian nor unitarian, that such distinctions were not scriptural, and that they were content to be simply Christian—speaking where the Scriptures speak and being silent where the Scriptures are silent. So conscious were they of this point of view that many of their hymns had to undergo a process of expurgation to eliminate the persistent allusions to the trinity and the trinitarian controversy with which the hymnody of their day abounded.

Dr. Ames showed how these revised hymns were, in many modern Disciple hymn-books, being replaced by the "unexpurgated" original. He also called attention to the fact that what seems to be the extreme of condemnatory language against an alleged heretic is to call him a "Unitarian"!

This is a sheer case of imitation in which the Disciples have surrendered a far more advantageous point of view in exchange for the confusion of conventional Christian thinking.

It was a profound insight of Thomas Campbell's that led him and the early leaders of the movement for Christian unity to strive to disentangle themselves from the complexities of theological theorizing and take the simpler and more practical concepts of the New Testament as the basis of their common belief and fellowship.

But nowadays we are accustomed to smile at the provision which Alexander Campbell wrote into the charter of Bethany College prohibiting the teaching of "theology" there. Imitating denominational ways our colleges frankly teach "theology," lapsing back thus into the system of metaphysical indirections which have confused and divided the Church and inhibited the free flowing of its spiritual life.

The possibilities of a thought life for the Disciples of Christ, constructive, rich, spiritually fruitful, and congenial to the advancing thought life of the world—the possibilities that inhered in the attempt of the Campbell's to shake themselves free from traditional theology make our present imitative thought life almost pathetic.

In the matter of church methods, also, the Disciples have been imitators, to their own great cost. This is conspicuously true in the case of their modern evangelism which is an out-and-out adaptation from the denominations. And, strange to say, this evangelism represents a lapse into the very type of thing the pioneer Disciples most urgently protested against.

In its earlier period the Disciples movement made its appeal to the conscience through the thinking faculties. Their preachers were quiet, reasoning, didactic expositors of divine truth. They staked the whole claim of their gospel upon its reasonableness. In this their method stood sharply in contrast to the prevailing evangelism around them, which was highly emotional, often hypnotic and superstitious, and which used the well-known devices of mass control such as the so-called "mourners' bench" and the repeated "voting" of the various sections of the congregation.

The "exhortation" was the chief part of the "sermon" and evangelistic sermons came to be little else than exhortations, while the evangelists themselves came to be called "exhorters."

Against all this artificial manipulation of the emotions in the name of religion, the earlier Disciples, without our modern psychology to guide them, but with a sound instinct, revolted.

But instead of adhering to the good way in which our fathers placed our feet, we have wandered from it in imitation of conventional revivalism. The instructional element has practically dropped out of the preaching of our evangelists. The conversion of souls has become a "trick" to be "put over" more than a truth to be imparted. The whole enterprise is carried on in a highly wrought atmosphere charged with physical magnetism and, while it galvanizes the churches for the time being into increased activity, and enlarges their numbers—and saves many from lives of sin—its effect, nevertheless, is to vulgarize and cheapen spiritual things and to shut the Church out from a vastly wider and more effective service to mankind.

Costly beyond computation has been the surrender by the Disciples of their native method of propagating their ideals. Had they clung to the instructional, rational procedure, their Truth would have tended to grow with the years, it would have been amplified, reinterpreted, reapplied, renewed by the very effort to impart it rationally, and with the growth of their Truth there would have followed a corresponding growth of spiritual life, giving us quite a different and, no doubt, more admirable character than the proudest of us are today willing to boast.

As it is, this Truth of ours has tended to harden into fixed formulas, for the emotional and undigested acceptance of which our manipulative evangelism uses all its devices.

One of the most significant and startling evidences of the way our ideals have been hardening is the recently increasing use by a certain Disciple newspaper of the phrase "deposit of truth" as applied to the plea of the Disciples.

A "deposit" of truth can be preserved and handed down by the devices of an unthoughtful, emotional evangelism just as well as by Roman Catholic uncritical institutionalism

But Truth itself can be preserved only by rationally imparting it, and that means perennial reinterpretation and growth.

Our lack of constructive leaders during the past three decades, who might have kept us aware of methods that were congenial to the great task our fathers set out upon, has left us unduly susceptible to the suggestions coming from our religious neighbors and, by the impulse of imitation, we have unwittingly adopted from them concepts and methods which are utterly at variance with our ideals.

We shall find that this is true not alone in the fields of theory and methods but in the field of Christian experience also, the field of the spiritual life.

Which field we shall have to postpone entering until later.

The Charmed Life

A Sermon on the Text: "Against Such There is No Law."

BY BURRIS A. JENKINS.

The most outstanding preacher in Kansas City is Dr. Burris A. Jenkins. His words are carried far by the secular press; his influence on the life of the city is profound and his own congregation in Linwood Boulevard Church of Disciples comes as near worshiping him as it is allowable for Christian people to do. Talking the other day with an office-bearer in this church he said gravely that the main problem discussed nowadays at the meetings of the official board was how to handle the overflow on Sunday mornings. Especially were the officers concerned that those who could not gain entrance to the church should be treated with due courtesy by the ushers! The congregation for which Dr. Jenkins ministers was organized not more than a dozen years ago by the late Rev. T. P. Haley who took a fatherly satisfaction in the work of Dr. Jenkins, his successor. The following is a sermon preached very recently in Linwood Boulevard pulpit.

WE have all read in the stories of childhood, or in the myths of ancient peoples, the legend of the charmed life. It was supposed that there were some who bore about them some amulet, some hidden token, or about whom had been woven some secret spell that was a charm against all evil and all danger. Achilles, you remember, could be wounded in but one small portion of his frame. Joan of Arc was considered to be invincible and invulnerable, no arrow and no catapult could harm her. Colonel George Washington in the French and Indian wars was supposed, by his enemies, to bear a charmed life, for they repeatedly took deadly aim at him, and could never pierce him; so finally they ceased to fire upon him, saying that he could not be slain.

In these old folk-lore legends there were supposed to be certain times and seasons especially hallowed when men were safe from baleful influence of spirit, of devil, of hostile force of any kind. And even so late as Shakespeare we find Marcellus on the platform at Elsinore, in Hamlet, declaring:

Some say that ever 'gainst that season comes
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long:
And then, they say, no spirit dare stir abroad.
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike.
No fairy takes, nor witch hath power to charm.
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time.

There is truth in this old conception of the charmed life, God's own truth, and it can be put into modern scientific terms; indeed, St. Paul does so put it in this little clause which is our text: Against such as bear the fruits of the spirit, love, joy, long-suffering, and the rest—against such there is no law.

AN AGE OF LAW.

We live in an age of law and consciousness of law. In fact law has had its fascination for great thinkers in all times, from Aristotle and St. Paul on down to Huxley and Darwin and the scientists of today. Alexander Campbell first came into prominence through his great sermon on the Law. But in no age has the consciousness of law been so universal amongst the common people as it is today. We know that we live under the influence, under the guardianship, of law, surrounded and hedged in and dominated by law. We know there is no escape from it. We know that it is either with us or against us, according to our own attitude.

I never shall forget with what wonder and awe, yes, with what terror and dread, I learned for the first time from my big brother, who I supposed knew everything in the world, that the atmosphere was pressing upon my frame fifteen pounds to the square inch. Think of it! Fifteen pounds upon every inch of my little figure. Why was it that I was not crushed? Why did I not collapse? Why did I not disappear into the ground? It was a long time before I understood that the atmosphere was pressing upon all sides alike, inside and outside, above and below, in front and behind; and that it was that steadfast pressure of the atmosphere that was for me and not against me, that enabled me to stand up and walk, to run and play and live. So the existence of law, as at first we become intensely conscious of it, seems overpowering, awe-inspiring and terror-striking; but as we grow accustomed to it, we begin to appreciate and to understand that law is with us, and not against us, so long as we are law-abiding.

Rev. Burris A. Jenkins, D. D.

ORIGIN OF LAW.

Now, what is the origin of law? It is the mind of God. Man never made a law in the history of his being. Man only discovers and finds the law. The law is forever and eternal in the mind and heart of God. Law is God, God is law. We like to say that God is love. Yes, God is the law of love, and no less law for being love. And never for a moment do we escape from the presence and the operation of his law. It is with us all the time. It is true that man never made a natural law; he only discovers it. He looks into the world of nature round about; and in his laboratory or in his play with the forces of nature, he discovers that the same causes operating always in the same way produce the same effects; and when he observes it a hundred times, or a thousand times, and there has been no variation from the same sequence of events, he writes it down in a textbook or in his laboratory report and publishes it to the world as a law. He has not made any law. He has simply found out a law.

MAN'S DISCOVERY OF LAW.

The same thing is true with reference to statutory law. Men have observed in the course of centuries and millenniums that under certain circumstances, given certain conditions, men will always act towards each other in certain ways, if they act right. Consequently men have come to write down in their statute books that men under certain circumstances, given certain conditions, shall always act so towards each other; and they call it a law. Man has not made the law. He has simply discovered the law of being, of humanity, the law of the moral life.

It was Kant, the philosopher, who once declared: Two things fill me with awe; the starry heavens above, and within, the moral law.

A man then who is law-abiding, either towards nature or towards his fellowman, has no terror of the law; he is not afraid of it.

MR. EDISON IN HIS LABORATORY.

I spent a summer one time in a cottage next door to that in which the great Thomas Edison was spending his summer. Every morning from the veranda I used to look out upon his upper porch and see him sitting there behind the screen of vines, hidden from the passersby going to and from the lake, but easily visible to those upon either side, sitting with his great domed head upon his hand, in meditation, in thought, or in rest, and mentally I took off my hat to him every day. I would bare my head before him sooner than before the Tsar of all the Russias, Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany, or even King Albert of Little Belgium, because I believe he is a greater potentate, a greater benefactor.

They say Thomas Edison can stand in his laboratory, his great laboratory, his little laboratory, and there, carefully insulated, can turn loose all round him the force of the electric storm. There is the jagged lightning; there is the roll of thunder; and he, at the center, plays with it in a sense which Ben Franklin never dreamed of, plays with the storm, safe and unharmed, invulnerable, bearing the charmed life—because he knows the law, and puts himself at the point of safety within the law.

THE MORAL LAW.

Now, the same thing is true with regard to the moral law. There are some eminent jurists here in this house today, and I venture to say that no attorney amongst them knows all the laws that are on the statute books of the state of Missouri. But they are not afraid of the law. Those men, knowing that ignorance of the law excuses no man, either in nature or in society, sit in their seats this morning, serene and comfortable and unafraid. Why? They are ignorant of part of the law, but not afraid, because they know that their lives are in harmony with the spirit of the law, and the law is never a terror to good works. But out yonder along the railroad tracks, there somewhere in the thickets and forests, yonder in the purlieus and slums of the great cities, are men cringing and afraid, starting at their shadows, uneasy in their sleep and dream, in terror constantly, because they know they have outraged the law. So a man may carry about with him some secret purpose, intent, or aspiration, cherish some hidden sin within his moral fibre, which, like a foreign substance in the flesh, like an organism working in the body, creates civil war. Whenever a hostile outside substance comes into this body of mine, immediately the corpuscles of the blood are sent, like an army, to that point; and there a siege begins. The fight is internecine, it is inexorable, it is unending, until either the foreign substance is expelled, or the patient dies. That is precisely the attitude in which the offender against his own soul stands. The war is on; the foreign substance is there; and death or freedom must ensue. Either the will must be bowed until it is in harmony with the law, or else the inevitable consequences of the violation of the law must fall.

LAWS OF THE INNER LIFE.

There are two or three laws which apply to our inner life—for it is up to that plane that I wish to lead our thought this morning—to which I would ask your consideration.

There is a law, for example, which St. Paul calls the law of our members. Says he: "I find a law within me, in my body, fighting against the law of my mind, so that what I would do that I cannot, and what I would not that I do."

We saw this beautifully illustrated some years since at the World's Fair in Chicago. No doubt you saw the same group of statuary, either in the original, or in plaster, or in photographic reproduction, for it was scattered all over the country. Before that group of statuary crowds all the while were standing in the course of that exposition. It lay such hold upon the imaginations of men because they felt it was so true to their experience. There were two beautiful nude figures wrestling with each other. Their muscles stood out like bands of steel, the nerves and sinews like whipcords on their breasts. Great beads of perspiration dropped down their faces. One was above and one was beneath. The one above seemed to be pressing the one beneath down into the ground. Underneath was written: "I feel two natures struggling within me." The appeal of that group of artistic production is universal, because we all feel the two natures struggling within us. Identical in outward appearance, they both are we, and which of them is gaining the victory, our spirit or our flesh, is hidden from all but God alone to know.

NO TERROR FOR THE CHRISTIAN.

Yet this universal conflict, this unending battle which is going on within each of us, can have no terror for the man whose life is hidden with Christ in God. Whoso brings forth the fruits of the spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, and the rest, against such there is no law. This frame with all that it would lead us to, with its frailties, with its weaknesses, with its constantly degenerating character after we have reached the meridian of life, with all the care that we expend upon it, and the anxiety that it is to us, all the time growing grayer, and shriveling and withering towards the ground, can have no terror for the man whose soul is stayed on God. For after all it is not the things of the flesh, it is not the material elements by which we are surrounded, it is the inward man that supplies the real life of men. If his thoughts be given to his upper nature, if he cultivates within him whatever is true and beautiful and lovely and of good report, he need never fear the decay nor the failure nor the fall of the frame.

THINKING AND DOUBTING.

And once again. There is another law, for when the Christian passes beyond the childhood of his days in Christ, he wrestles little with his members. There is the law of the mind, which says, he who thinks shall doubt. Early in his religious experience the young Christian becomes conscious of that law. The more he learns the more he realizes that his old and trusted conceptions are open to doubt and to question. If this is an age of law, it is also an age of doubt. Says Dr. Van Dyke:

"Its coat of arms is an interrogation point, rampant, above three bishops dormant, and its motto is Query."

If so, it is a hopeful sign of the times, for the man who does not doubt, does not think. The man who has his mind made up upon all terrestrial and celestial things is the man who has no mind that is worth making up at all. He is fossilized and crystallized. The mind that rests content upon tradition handed down to him from father and from grandfather, from teacher and from professor, is degenerating toward decay; while every man who for himself explores the foundations of his intellectual beliefs, must begin to question and to doubt.

Prof. William James has said that the trouble with the American people is that they do not think. He quoted the little boy's definition, "Faith is when you believe something that you know ain't so." It is a far greater crime against the God-given mind of man to try to believe something that you are conscious is not true, than it is to openly say, "I do not believe it," "I won't believe it." "There lives more faith in honest doubt, believe me, than in half the creeds," said Tennyson. And then he sanely adds:

> Cleave ever to the sunnier side of doubt,
> And cling to Faith beyond the forms of Faith!

So it is a hopeful sign when a young person or an old person, for that matter, begins to say, "I doubt this," "I doubt that." "I want to investigate that."

INQUIRY PRESSED TO GOD'S THRONE.

This age is an age which does not stop short at the throne of God itself; but asking questions of his world, of his sunshine, of his moon, of his stars, comes to the foot of the great white throne itself, and says to God: "What art Thou?" "Who art Thou?" "Who am I?" and "Why hast Thou made me?"

There was one of the disciples who was proverbially called the doubter. After Jesus' resurrection he it was who would not believe until he had put his finger into the print of the nails and thrust his hand into the wound of the spear in his side. And Jesus said to him, "Come, Thomas, reach forth thy finger and thy hand, and be not faithless, but believing." He spoke with infinite tenderness and appreciation to Thomas, the skeptic. On a certain occasion farther back in his life, Jesus had turned his face to go up to the city of Jerusalem, and his disciples said to him, "Master, if you go up to the city at this time you will pay for it with your life. You know that the Pharisees are lying in wait for you to take you." But he set his face inexorably to go to the city of Jerusalem. Then said Thomas, "Come, let us also go with him, that we may die with him." Commend me to that kind of skeptic, the man who does not understand his Lord, the man to whom Jesus Christ is a mystery that he never will solve, and knows he never will solve; yet who so loves Jesus Christ, that he says, "Come, let me go with him, that I may die with him." Against such there is no law; against a man who puts his hand into the hand of Christ and gives his will to the will of Christ, against him there is no law of doubt that can prevail. He bears the charmed life.

THE LAW OF SORROW.

Then once again. There is the old, old law of sorrow. As old as Job and older. Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble. Man is born to evil as the sparks to fly upward. Is there evil in the city and the Lord hath not done it? Is there any life lived under the blue that has not had its days of grief and distress and pain? Sorrow is the universal heritage of the race. It is a law, just as inexorable as the laws of nature by which we are hedged in and with which we are surrounded. None of us escapes from it.

Sir Edwin Arnold, in his Light of Asia, tells how Buddha sleeps in his beautiful palace while silver stringed lyres are placed in the windows, so that the soft zephyrs of the night can blow over them and lull to sleep the prince and his consort and household. And this is the message which comes over the silver strings to the ears of the restless, uneasy Buddha:

> We are the voices of the wandering wind,
> Which moan for rest, and rest can never find;
> Lo! as the wind is, so is mortal life:
> A moan, a sigh, a sob, a storm, a strife.

SORROW UNIVERSAL.

Into each life some rain must fall, yes, and some hail and some thunderbolts. Lives are riven and torn all round about us; and nobody knows when the lightning may strike him or his. What shall we do in the face of this inexorable law? Well, against the life that is hidden with Christ in God, the life that brings forth the fruits of the Spirit, love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance, there is no law of sorrow that can prevail. I know it is true. Over and over again I have seen lives that have been given into his keeping, bowed and twisted and torn, as by the electric storm, cleft as by the lightning, and still firm and strong as if rooted in the rock.

> Who never ate his bread in sorrow,
> Who never spent the darksome hours
> Weeping, and watching for the morrow,
> He knows ye not, ye heavenly powers.

I do not often tell death stories, but I will tell just this one. The incident took place in my church in another city. There was a widow who had three sons, and she

Training a Christian Leadership

BY W. C. MORRO.

Last week we published Dr. Morro's survey of the educational facilities of the Disciples of Christ for the training of Christian ministers. The present article is the concluding portion of his survey dealing with the preparation of Christian leaders for other tasks than the pulpit ministry.

UNTIL recently there was no regular and standard method of training candidates for mission fields. Some were educated in the colleges, but there was no special training provided. Others took in the seminaries the regular course, but it was in no way altered to meet the special needs of those who were to be missionaries. Missionary Training Schools were provided for those who were to be lay-workers and who could not take either the college or the seminary course, but these provided no special and distinctive missionary training. It was in the nature of a short cut for those who could not travel the longer way.

About five years ago the faculty of one of our colleges appointed a committee to investigate and report what should be done in the way of providing special training for prospective missionaries. This committee found it extremely difficult to get anything definite upon this subject. It is, however, no longer difficult, for the Edinburgh Conference outlined the needs of the missionary educationally and impressed upon the church the duty of meeting these needs. It advised that the missionary should be trained in those branches which would give him a knowledge of the society, history, religion, and customs of the people among whom he is to labor and which would give him efficiency for his task. Two committees, one in England and one in America, called the Boards of Missionary Preparation, have continued this work, and their reports are accepted as the standard authority on the education for missionary candidates.

HOW TRAINED BY THE DISCIPLES.

Hiram, Atlantic Christian, Keuka, Phillips Bible Institute, and Butler colleges announce no courses in missions. The students of the last named have access to the classes of the College of Missions. A number of these mention voluntary classes. Texas Christian University has a course of one hour per week for the year: Bethany, one of four hours per week for one term; The College of the Bible, Drake University, the Bible College of Missouri, and Eureka College each have one of two hours per week for the year: and Milligan College and Eugene Bible University announce courses but do not tell how often they meet. An examination of the announcements of these courses makes it evident that they were designed to create an interest in missions and provide such knowledge of this subject as an intelligent Christian should have. They were not planned to equip the future missionary for his task.

The College of Missions is the only institution of our brotherhood which is doing this work exclusively. Its growing influence and prestige, its vision and comprehensive grasp of and fitness for its task, point to it as the institution in which most of our missionaries of the future will be trained. Its curriculum conforms to the standards of the Board of Missionary Preparation, which continues the educational work of the Edinburgh Conference, and at a recent meeting of the American branch of this committee, it and Yale University, Hartford School of Missions, and Dr. White's Bible Training School were recognized as the four centers of missionary education in the United States. The College of Missions should be commended for the clear conception of the scope of its work and the definite statement of its task.

RELIGIOUS TEACHERS.

The principles and the rules of teaching as practiced by the best of teachers have been but recently applied to religious instruction. Our own colleges have probably been abreast of the procession; at least they have been led by only a few of the more exceptionally progressive institutions. Many of the seminaries and colleges which train preachers announce courses in religious pedagogy, because it is recognized that the preacher should apply these principles in his educational work. Only a few, however, attempt to train leaders for the Sunday-school and for the other educational activities of the church. The first step towards the embodying of religious pedagogy in the training of our religious leaders was taken by the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., in the endowment of the Alexander Hopkins Chair of Religious Pedagogy. This was begun in 1907, and the endowment was completed and the chair occupied in the fall of 1909. Each student of this institution is expected to take one year's work in religious pedagogy. But little has been done by this college in giving special training to others than the ministerial students.

COLLEGES AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Drake University was a close second to the College of the Bible in organizing a Department of Religious Education. This department includes courses in Methods in Religious Education, History, Agencies and Material of Religious Education, Principles of Religious Education, Psychology of Religion, the Graded Sunday-school Curriculum, and Practice Teaching. A certificate in Religious Education is granted to graduates of the College of Liberal Arts who have completed thirty semester hours in this subject. This institution has converted its Department of Religious Education into a School of Religious Education which is related to the College of Liberal Arts in exactly the same way as the College of Education. It offers a general course, a four-year diploma course, and a two-year certificate course. Drake is the first institution of the country to organize an undergraduate School of Religion that maintains college standards. It has chosen this as its distinctive field of work. The following institutions offer courses in Religious Education: Christian University, Hiram College, Texas Christian University, Eureka College, Milligan College, and Eugene Bible University.

SOCIAL WORKERS

Upon the training of this type of religious worker there is little history to be written. In the past, such work was done by preacher or layman whose heart was touched by its need, and he gathered experience as he went along and thus trained himself. It is now recognized that one needs special training for this work as much as does the preacher or the missionary. There are rules which should guide the philanthropist just as there are rules for every other human worker. In the large cities, schools for the training of such workers have been opened, such as for example, the New York School of Philanthropy. In most cases, they are interdenominational or even connected very loosely with any church. In some smaller cities, associates of pastors and other interested persons have established classes for the training of such workers. In a few of these our brethren are contributing a part. None of our institutions which train preachers have attempted anything in the way of training social workers. The College of Missions has established a chair of Social Service and is prepared to give special training to those who plan to work in special fields, such as the city, the rural community, and so forth.

THE CHARMED LIFE.

toiled hard to send two of these boys to college. They were at home for the summertime, and they went out to bathe in the little stream that flows upon three sides of that inland town. And the youngest boy, unable to swim, suddenly got beyond his depth, and cried out for help. The eldest brother plunged in to aid him. Unable to swim, he also began to cry for help. Then the second brother leaped to the help of the others. And all three were struggling in the water. Somehow, the little one managed to scramble out; but the other two, the college boys, were drowned. I sat with that widow through the long watches of that night as she rocked back and forth in a white and tearless agony. I followed that double procession to the cemetery. And again, as the weeks and months went by, I watched the widow's face, as in her accustomed place she sat in the sanctuary. Her hair visibly whitened, her face deepened with the furrows of her irreparable loss; and yet it seemed to me as if that face shone like the face of an angel.

That is but one out of many instances that came under a pastor's observation in which men and women are shaken by what seems unbearable grief; and yet stand firm. A life that is given in keeping to God, a life the will of which flows in harmony with the will of God—you cannot obliterate, you cannot destroy that life, for God made it, and it is eternal. Against such there is no law in God's mind nor out of God's mind, which is the seat of all law, that can prevail. We cannot know all the law. We know very little about the law of God in nature or in man. We are just beginning to think his thoughts over after him. We know very little of the statutory law upon the books of the nations and the usages of men. We know very little of the moral law within us. We are just learning the A. B. C.'s of the invariable unchangeable law that the Hebrews wrote in stone. We know very little about the laws of our members, of the laws of our mind, and the laws of the creation. But we do know this, that as sure as God lives he has made no law that is against us, if our wills but flow in harmony with his own. Ignorance of the law may excuse none, but if the man's will be right, the law is with him, and not against him—he bears the Charmed Life.

"Why Have Ye Done This?"

By E. Debat Ponson

We print herewith the powerful picture by the French artist, E. Debat-Ponson, which in English is entitled "Why have ye done this?" It is a picture of war. Christian generals, easily recognizable in their portraits, stand amid their victims, men and women, also Christians, who have been murdered by them. Above them they flaunt unabashed the banner of the Cross. Above them appears the Christ, sad and with pathetic rebuke. The French title of the painting is the sarcastic comment, "Christians, love one another."

The World's Last War

A Message to the People of the United States.

H. G. WELLS, IN THE METROPOLITAN.

THE cause of a war and the object of a war are not necessarily the same. The cause of this war is the invasion of Luxemburg and Belgium. We declared war because we were bound by treaty to declare war. We have been pledged to protect the integrity of Belgium since the kingdom of Belgium has existed. If the Germans had not broken the guarantees they shared with us to respect the neutrality of these little states, we should certainly not be at war at the present time. The fortified eastern frontier of France could have been held against any attack without any help from us. We had no obligations and no interests there. We were pledged to France simply to protect her from a naval attack by sea, but the Germans had already given us an undertaking not to make such an attack. It was our Belgian treaty and the sudden outrage on Luxemburg that precipitated us into this conflict. No power in the world would have respected our flag or accepted our national word again if we had not fought.

So much for the immediate cause of the war.

THE OBJECT OF THE WAR.

But now we come to the object of this war. We began to fight because our honor and our pledge obliged us; but so soon as we are embarked upon the fighting we have to ask ourselves what is the end at which our fighting aims. We cannot simply put the Germans back over the Belgium border and tell them not to do it again. We find ourselves at war with that huge military empire, with which we have been doing our best to keep the peace since first it arose upon the ruins of French imperialism in 1871. And war is mortal conflict. We have now either to destroy or be destroyed. We have not sought this reckoning, we have done our utmost to avoid it, but now that it has been forced upon us it is imperative that it should be a thorough reckoning. This is a war that touches every man and every home in each of the combatant countries. It is a war, as Mr. Sidney Low has said, not of soldiers, but of whole peoples. And it is a war that must be fought to such a finish that every man in each of the nations engaged understands what has happened. There can be no diplomatic settlement that will leave German imperialism free to explain away its failure to its people and start new preparations. We have to go on until we are absolutely done for or until the Germans as a people know that they are beaten and are convinced that they have had enough of war.

KRUPP AND THE KAISER.

This is already the vastest war in history. It is war not of nations, but of mankind. It is a war to exorcise a world-madness and end an age.

And note how this public rottenness has had its secret side. The man who preaches cynicism in his own business transactions had better keep a detective and a cash register for his clerks, and it is the most natural thing in the world to find that this system, which is outwardly vile, is also inwardly rotten. Beside the Kaiser stands the firm of Krupp, a second head to the state; on the very steps of the throne is the armament trust, that organized scoundrelism which has, in its relentless propaganda for profit, mined all the security of civilization, bought up and dominated a press, ruled a national literature, corrupted universities and sold the Germans bad goods. For, note that all accounts agree as to the poorness of the German guns and shells. Krupp guns are scarcely better than Krupp diplomacy. Imperialism means tyranny, tyranny means monopoly, monopoly means rascality.

WAR FOR THE SAKE OF PEACE.

For this is now a war for peace.

It aims straight at disarmament. It aims at a settlement that shall stop this sort of thing forever. Every soldier who fights against Germany now is a crusader against war. This, the greatest of all wars, is not just another war; it is the Last War. England, France, Italy, Belgium, Spain, and all the little countries of Europe, are heartily sick of war; the Tzar has expressed a passionate hatred of war: the most of Asia is unwarlike; the United States has no illusions about war. And never was war begun so joylessly, and never was war begun with so grim a resolution. In England, France, Belgium, Russia there is no thought of glory. We know we face unprecedented slaughter and agonies; we know that for neither side will there be easy triumphs nor prancing victories; already, after a brief fortnight in that warring sea of men, there is famine as well as hideous butchery, and soon there must come disease. Can it be otherwise?

"WE ARE RESOLVED."

We face perhaps the most awful winter that mankind has ever faced. But we English and our allies, who did not seek this catastrophe, face it with anger and determination rather than despair. Through this war we have to march, through pain, through agonies of the spirit worse than pain, through seas of blood and filth. We English have not had things kept from us. We know what war is. We have no delusions. We have read books that tell us of the stench of the battlefields, and the nature of wounds: books that Germany suppressed and hid from her people. And we face these horrors to make an end of them. There shall be no more Kaisers, there shall be no more Krupps, we are resolved.

PRAYER IN TIME OF WAR.

MUCH has been said in the press of late regarding the wisdom, or unwisdom, of President Wilson's call for a day of prayer in behalf of peace. The continuance of hostilities with unabated fury, and the indications that many months are to pass before even the beginnings of peace can be expected, give ground for cynical comment on the part of those who believe that prayer is futile, and that a public official ought not to commit himself to the perpetuation of a superstition.

Christian people will not be likely to take this view. Whatever may be one's particular theory as to the character and efficacy of prayer, there is no doubt that a common petition by a community or a nation has many values aside from the immediate procurement of the blessing asked. No one who holds the common faith doubts the value of Mr. Wilson's suggestion.

Yet it is apparent that all such seeming public tests of the value of prayer raise serious and valid questions in the minds of many interested people. It is open to debate whether public prayers for rain, for deliverance from forest fires, for protection from an approaching enemy, and for peace in time of war are wise. They offer an admirable opportunity for believers to express their faith in a public and united manner. But they leave too much margin for cynical comment on the part of those whose theory of prayer demands immediate and satisfactory response, or else insists that there can be no efficacy in it.

The divine purposes do not wait for human advice. The Father of all is not a capricious and variable spirit, listening now to this voice of appeal and now to that in a confused effort to hear and answer all.

The true philosophy of prayer lies much nearer the heart of things than this superficial view would express. And in that deeper sense of reality in prayer the Christian still has heart and confidence to go on praying earnestly and hopefully for peace.

But he does not desire to test the validity of prayer, a validity which he has proved for himself in a thousand experiences, by the issue of events in which the will of God seems to be given so small a field of operation by the angry passions of human life.

TURKEY IN THE WAR.

UNHAPPY is the figure that is outlined by the Ottoman Empire in the present European conflict. Every consideration of national safety and perpetuity would lead the Turkish government to avoid entanglement in the snarl of present events.

And it is apparent that whatever statesmanship Turkey has left to her in these degenerate days on the Bosphorus she has attempted to employ in the maintenance of neutrality.

No doubt there are more aggressive spirits, of whom Enver Bey is presumed to be the leader; but even the so-called "war party" in Constantinople would hardly have dared to enter the conflict in face of the almost total abhorrence of the hardships and crushing burdens which war entails on a people so badly governed as the Turks.

It would seem, however, that the slow and persistent influence of German diplomacy has at last forced Turkey's hand, and actually against her will she has been compelled to take the fatal step. The background of these events was furnished by the visit of the Kaiser to Turkey and Palestine many years ago, since which time the relations between the two courts have been intimate and cordial. It is difficult for Turkey to refuse a German request, and a long line of approaches was brought to a climax by the "Goeben" incident, in which a German warship, seeking refuge from destruction, found shelter in Turkish waters and was "purchased" by the Turkish government, presumably at the urgent request of Berlin.

It was really the aggressive conduct of the "Goeben," still commanded by German officers, but nominally a Turkish vessel, which precipitated the conflict between Turkey and Russia and drew the reluctant, but helpless, Turks into the vortex.

One now hears that the "Jehad," or holy war, has been proclaimed by the Sheik-ul-Islam. This war will be impotent to rouse the Mohammedans of the extra-Turkish world against any of the allied powers. It may, however, serve as a pretext in Constantinople, Asia Minor, Syria and Egypt for the outbreak of fanaticism against Christians. And if it comes to that, it is not likely that discrimination will separate between enemies, friends and neutrals.

The immediate results are almost certain to be disorder and suffering, both for the Turkish people and their non-Mohammedan neighbors. The ultimate results can hardly be less than the total extinction of the Turkish Empire as a European power, and the completion of the long-cherished Russian project—the occupation of Constantinople.

PERSONAL ANIMUS AND THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST.

BY this time it would seem that our Christian editors would have learned the injustice of using uncorroborated secular newspaper reports as the basis for a condemnatory interpretation of a Christian minister's utterances.

But where there is animus in a Christian editor's heart against a Christian minister it seems to be expecting too much to hope that mere considerations of justice will prompt that editor to hold in reserve his public judgment upon that minister until he learns from other sources whether what the newspaper says is true or false.

Personal animus does not easily submit to control by the spirit of Christ.

So there need be no surprise at the treatment accorded to Rev. H. J. Loken of Berkeley, Cal., by Rev. A. C. Smither, editor of the Christian Evangelist, last week. The editor, it seems, received certain clippings from San Francisco papers in which Mr. Loken, who had just returned home from the Atlanta convention, was represented as having been "sustained by the national convention in his stand of admitting members to the Berkeley church without immersion." "According to the local pastor," said the report, "the action of the national body automatically reverses the stand taken in the state convention."

To which the Christian Evangelist subjoins the following comment, the whole article standing under the charitable heading, "Misrepresenting the Facts:"

> If Mr. Loken inspired these statements, or if he does not correct them, it will go far, with brethren who know the facts, toward convicting him of a disingenuousness more serious in its ethical character than an erroneous view of baptism and its relation to church membership. Everyone who attended the Atlanta Convention, including Mr. Loken, knows perfectly well that the question of the Berkeley church and its action, and that of its pastor, never came before the convention, either directly or indirectly. The fact is, we venture, that not 10 per cent of those present at the convention knew that the Berkeley pastor was there. It is therefore an utter misrepresentation of facts for Mr. Loken to be posing before his church and the community as one who, though rejected by the brethren of his own state, found vindication in the National Convention. Our national conventions never deal with such questions. Had it been deemed wise for the convention at Atlanta to have passed its judgment on the wisdom or unwisdom of the action of the Berkeley pastor, it would have been an overwhelming condemnation of his course. But it is no part of its business to deal with such questions, and to represent it as "automatically reversing the action of the Northern California Convention" is to gravely misrepresent both its policy and its sentiments. A weak cause is not strengthened by such disingenuousness.

Simultaneously the Christian Standard publishes the same newspaper reports but more at length, under the heading "Lokenism Rampant," and prints a coarser editorial but one not quite so venomous as the above.

The Christian Century would stake its further support of Mr. Loken on its confidence that he made no such representations as the newspapers allege concerning the convention "sustaining" him and his church in the matter of the "open membership" or concerning the automatic reversal of the California convention's action.

What Mr. Loken probably did say—and we have no information except that derived from these published clippings—was that his credentials from Berkeley church were duly received by the general convention, which was true, and that he found many friends at the convention and enroute home who approved his course and wished him and his church Godspeed, and this also was true.

That his grateful recounting of his experiences, in view no doubt of the many misgivings with which he had started to the convention, would lend itself to such interpretation as it received at the hands of the newspaper men was perfectly natural, unaccustomed as they are to the ways of the Disciples. Their error was all the more natural when it is recalled that some members of the opposition to Berkeley church had prepared the reporters for such an interpretation by sending a protest against the receiving of Mr. Loken's credentials by the Atlanta convention.

Mr. Loken is a man of the truth. But if his enemy denies that, he will not deny that Mr. Loken is a man of a high order of intelligence, and it would have betokened a very juvenile order of intelligence if, disregarding truth, he had made the representations Mr. Smither affects to believe he made.

A BLIGHTING INFLUENCE.

UNDOUBTEDLY the most demoralizing and blighting influence upon the spiritual life of the Disciples of Christ is the professional evangelism which has grown to be a sort of institution in recent years. It has recently organized a "missionary society" of its own which the sophisticated know is in reality a mere craftsmen's guild for the promotion of one another's interests and the securing of money for the continued support of their trade in a time when calls from the better-class and more resourceful churches are painfully fewer and farther between.

From the editorial pages of last week's Christian Standard we pluck these two paragraphs which, in their way, represent our sentiments and convictions:

A certain church was all run down. It looked like the preacher might have to move. Somebody suggested having a big revival. Accordingly a "troup" was secured. The preacher is shamed and humiliated by the nightly parade of brass horns and legerdemain. The church is manipulated, caricatured, prostituted and worn to a frazzle with financial appeals. The people say, "Never again." The preacher says, "Not for a thousand dollars." But that preacher stood by the evangelist, seconding everything through four weeks of it, and then sent in a long telegram, reporting "647 new recruits," and warmly commending the evangelists.

The separation of preachers into two classes—one the "pastors," and the other the "evangelists"—is arbitrary, unnatural and unscriptural. It has done our cause great injury. It assumes that the "evangelist" has no special interest in the local church, and that the "pastor" has no business holding meetings. And the result has been to produce two sets of lopsided preachers—one lopsided toward revivalism, and the other toward the "settled ministry."

The Christian Century finds so little in the Christian Standard these days with which it can agree, either in respect of the spirit or the teachings of that paper, that we feel like clasping hands editorially on any points of agreement that may be left to us.

If we dared hope that the Standard would take its own words seriously and organize its news and its editorial columns consistently with its position here so well defined and illustrated there would be hope of our walking together in this path at least, if not in some others.

THE PERIL OF THE PRISONER.

THAT these are days of difficulty for all the unprovided is one of the things we are constantly saying to ourselves and each other. The number of applicants for labor and charity is very large and is constantly increasing. The distresses of the poor will tax the generosity and administrative skill of all friendly citizens during the coming winter.

But there is one class of unfortunate people who are in particular peril. They are released, paroled, and pardoned prisoners. In the most favorable industrial conditions they have a difficult task in adjusting themselves to society. No man is taken on for any kind of a job without careful inspection of his record. The slightest indication of a prison career puts a black mark across his opportunity.

Yet many of these men are not criminals. We know enough about the errors of justice to feel very sensitive about the fate of many a man who is sent to prison for a fault of judgment, a mistake in conduct, or even a foolish act of good will. Yet these unfortunate, but not vicious, men and youths come out from a short period in prison with the mark of Cain upon them, and only exceptional good fortune, or the assistance of some genuine friend at the critical moment can set them again upon the highway of an honest life.

It is for this reason that the work of the Central Howard Association is so admirable. It is a volunteer group of men and women who are conscious of the great need of friendship and effort to save the released prisoner from becoming a habitual criminal. Their records show the difficulty of getting places for such men, but also the very great rewards in character-making and saving which come from the effort.

UNEXPECTED HELP.

ONE is not accustomed to expect help for the more generous view of religion from the Christian Standard. But the good services rendered by Pres. F. D. Kershner, who conducts a department in the Standard, must not go unappreciated.

Mr. Kershner some time ago took the position thaat the Greek word for baptize did not mean immerse in its New Testament use, and that therefore baptism and immersion are not synonymous, as Baptists and Disciples have always held. Baptism, he said, means a great deal more than immersion.

More recently Mr. Kershner takes up the conversation between Jesus and Nicodemus in which Jesus is recorded as saying, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter the Kingdom of God." This text is the bulwark of the theory of water regeneration, and has always been the safe refuge of legalism.

Mr. Kershner some time ago took the position that the Greek blow. He says the phrase "born of water" does not refer to Christian baptism at all, but is a cursory reference to John's baptism.

Nothing is clearer, to the writer at least, than the fact that the expression, "born of water," has no specific reference to Christian baptism. Jesus is discussing the new kingdom with Nicodemus. The conversation, it should be remembered, took place during the early Judean ministry, only a short while after Christ had himself received baptism at the hands of John. Nothing would seem to be more natural than the fact that the conversation must have touched at least upon the ministry and mission of John. Jesus thereafter proceeds to differentiate his own work from that of his great forerunner. In doing so, he necessarily says that something more than the mere baptism of John is needed to enter the new kingdom. John's converts had been born of water, but the new converts must not only be born of water (John's baptism), but also of the Spirit. John himself expressed exactly the same idea when he said (Matt. 3:11): "I indeed baptize you in water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you in the Holy Spirit and in fire." The expression in John 3:5 is precisely parallel to that in Matt. 3:11, or Mark 1:8, and should be understood, without doubt, in the same way. All this, of course, has no bearing upon the argument for immersion as the form of baptism contained in the passage. Whether the expression, "born of water," looks to the past and refers directly to John's baptism, or not, it evidently refers to immersion. The significant thing is that this exegesis removes the one great proof-text for the old mechanical theory of baptismal regeneration which was responsible for the sprinkling of infants, in the first place, and which even yet holds a respectable place in certain sections of the Christian world.

The Christian Century does not accept Mr. Kershner's interpretation, but it does regard it as a good omen indicating the recoil felt by so many spiritual natures against imputing to Jesus a statement which is contradicted by all his teaching and by none more than the immediate context in which it is found.

If the Standard editor doesn't watch out Mr. Kershner may be making quotations from a certain book called "The Meaning of Baptism" before long!

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Father Endeavor Clark for Peace.

A new department is being organized in the Christian Endeavor movement which will be called the Endeavor Peace Union. All of the million members in this country will be asked to become members of the new peace society and those who join will take the following pledge: "As a follower of the Prince of Peace I will seek to promote good will among men and peace on earth: I will work as I have opportunity toward the abolition of war and will endeavor to cement the fellowship of the people of all nations and denominations throughout the world."

Two Episcopal Bishops Leave Chicago.

Two clergymen of the Protestant Episcopal church are leaving Chicago for the west to become bishops. Dean Walter T. Sumner of SS. Peter and Paul Cathedral is appointed to the diocese of Oregon with headquarters at Portland, and Herman Page, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church will establish headquarters in Spokane, Wash., as bishop of Washington. Dean Sumner has come to be a national figure through his service on the vice commission in Chicago. He was a member of the school board of his city and was widely noticed on account of his attitude toward eugenic marriage, demanding of all candidates for holy matrimony, certificates from a physician pronouncing them fit for marriage. These two new bishops were given a banquet at the Auditorium Hotel in Chicago before their departure, at which Bishop Anderson presided.

A Christian Life Institute.

The Methodist church at New Ross, Ind., held a Christian Life Institute November 17-19. The purpose of the institute was to relate the church sympathetically to the industrial life of the community. The Institute was arranged by the pastor of the church, Rev. Oakel F. Hall. Among the speakers were Miss Elizabeth L. Cowan, teacher of domestic science; Dr. W. A. Millis, president of Hanover College; Dr. U. G. Leazenby of Crawfordsville; and Professor Geo. L. Roberts of Purdue University. The Purdue professor spoke in favor of a rural ministry which had been trained in the arts of agriculture. Others insisted upon the cultivation of various forms of social life in the rural church. The point of view of the entire Institute was that the church should become in every sense the community center.

Suffering in Labrador.

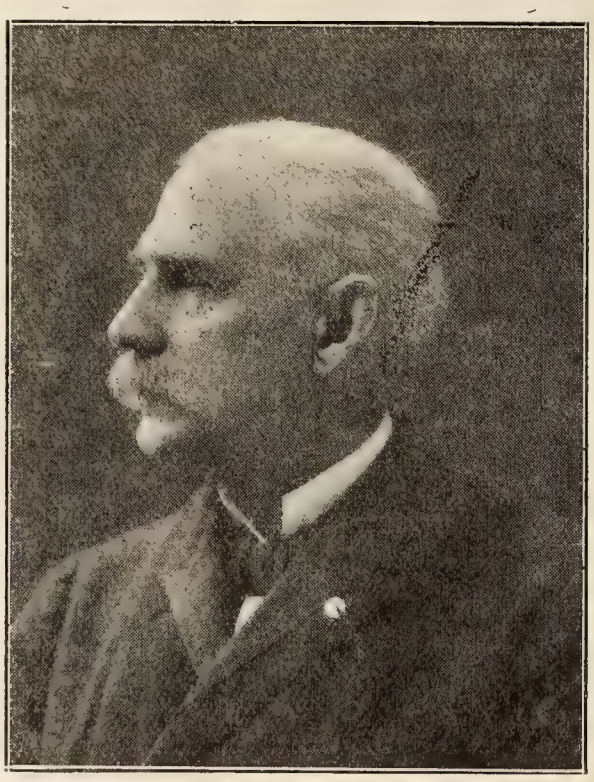
Dr. W. T. Grenfell reports that there will be great destitution in the Labrador country this winter as the fishing has been the worst for a whole generation. For a time the wireless outfit was not working and this further interfered with the movements of the ships. There are no rich neighbors up in the Labrador country so help will doubtless have to come from the United States and Canada.

A New Union Church in Manila.

On October 11, the first service of worship was held for the new Union church of Manila. This church is formally a union of the American Methodist and Presbyterian congregations but in reality many other Christians are included in the membership. Among the different denominations represented will be Baptists, Congregationalists, United Brethren and Disciples. The Episcopalians will continue to maintain their own services in their cathedral. There has been for some time a union seminary in Manila for the training of preachers called the Ellinwood Bible Seminary. In this seminary, the United Brethren, Methodists and Presbyterians have co-operated. Congregationalists and Baptists will help in the school this coming year and it is reported that Disciples may co-operate after a time.

Cardinal O'Connell Wants Tolerance.

There was a large gathering of Catholic laymen in Boston on November 15, to protest against the alleged outrages in



Dr. F. E. Clark, who is organizing the "Endeavor Peace Union."

Mexico against priests and nuns. An address was made by Cardinal O'Connell. Resolutions were passed demanding that our government should not recognize any government in Mexico that does not guarantee perfect freedom of religion as that is understood by citizens of this country. So soon after the experiences of Dr. Francis E. Clark in Spain last summer, this declaration is interesting. It is charged that the present anti-catholic tendencies are the result of the influence of the free-masons in Mexico.

Y. M. C. A. Teaches English.

One branch of the activities of the great Y. M. C. A. at Detroit, is that of teaching immigrants to speak English. The Association has carried on special work at the Ford Automobile works where a thousand workers have been brought into a class to learn English, the works paying for the teachers. The company justifies the expense as an efficiency measure. The entire work is being supervised by J. H. Dague, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of that city, and a protege of Dr. Edward Steiner in the study of the immigrant question. The Peter Roberts method of instruction is used and each instructor has a complete outfit of household objects with which to demonstrate each sentence. This method does not require that the instructor should know the language of the immigrant and men of various nationalities may be taught in the same class.

Presbyterians Exhibit City Work.

The "World in Chicago," a missionary exhibit of last year, has evidently suggested to the Presbyterians of Chicago a method of making people understand city missions. A traveling exhibit was taken to six great centers of the city and all Presbyterians were gathered in that section to see and hear. A number of Persians from the Persian chapel gave the Mohammedan call to prayer. A group of Belgian children from Christopher House sang the national anthem. A set of harness and a pair of shoes repaired by homeless men who have come to the Christian Industrial League for help, was used to show how down-and-out men were redeemed through labor. E. P. Hill, the superintendent, estimated that twelve thousand people were reached by the exhibit.

A Deputation to the War Zone.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is arranging to send a deputation of prominent ministers to the various countries of Europe that are now engaged in war. The purpose of this deputation is to bear "the good-will and sympathy of the Christian churches of America." It is thought that this deputation may have influence with all the Christian bodies in Europe on the side of peace. It was the Federal Council which suggested to the President of the United States the idea of setting apart a day of prayer for peace.

Anxiety Over Christians in Egypt.

Edwin Doak, a Methodist missionary who arrived from Egypt recently on the Greek steamer Thessaloniki reports conditions in Egypt very bad and that Christians are being killed there frequently by fanatical Mohammedans. He has been on the field for ten years, but was compelled to come home fearing that the proclamation of a holy war among the Mohammedans would produce some very disastrous results.

Methodists Plant University at Rome.

The Methodists have an aggressive work in Italy and the latest development in their plans is to build a university on a hill overlooking the Vatican. A half million dollars will be put into the school immediately with possible later additional funds.

A Play on Mormonism.

The country is already familiar with the work of ex-Senator Cannon of Utah who has been lecturing on the abuses of Mormonism. He has also written a novel called "Under the Prophet in Utah." In this latter work he was assisted by Harvey J. O'Higgins, the celebrated play writer. We now have the announcement that Mr. O'Higgins has written a play called "Polygamy" which deals with the same question. It will be put on for the first time in New York on November 30. The play tells of a household which is monogamous but where the dogma of polygamy forces a second wife into the family circle against the wishes of all three of the parties concerned.

Secretary Bryan Addresses Presbyterians.

William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, addressed the Presbyterians of Chicago in the Auditorium Theatre on November 29. The occasion was a big campaign in behalf of city missions carried out by that denomination. The theatre is the largest in the city but hundreds were turned away. He urged that in city missions, Christians should not seek to repair social damage simply but to arrive at the cause and remove it. He especially mentioned the saloon as follows: "Just think what would be the result if all the Christians banded together to put an end to the people who make a business of ruining people. Brewers, saloon-keepers and distillers are organized. They look down upon and oppose the man who interferes with their business and the man who doesn't consume liquor. The evil forces are organized. Why not the good people? The time is past when we can shrink from the responsibility. I am expecting some day that the Christians will be banded together and when a candidate for office is asked by the representatives of the liquor interests how he stands on that question his back bone will be strengthened by the army of church people and those who oppose that business."

Ask for Christmas Sacrifice.

The Presbyterians face a need for an emergency missionary fund on account of the war. Missionaries are in distress in different parts of the world. It is necessary to raise a half million of dollars to meet these needs. A committee of the Synod of Illinois is asking for Christmas sacrifices. Members are requested to give a day's wage or to abstain from meat one day each week for a year and give the money thus saved. Rev. William S. Marquis is the Chicago member of the committee.

Dr. J. A. MacDonald Talks on War.

Dr. J. A. MacDonald, editor of the Toronto Globe, spoke before the Chicago Sunday Evening Club on November 29. He pleaded for the neutrality of the United States in the present war. He said: "This is a neighborhood world. Each one of the millions of men who are fighting across the water is our brother. It is our common tragedy that 2,000 years after the Master suffered and died for us this awful conflict should break forth."

Presbyterians Call Home Mission Leader.

The Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian church has called a new president, Dr. Wilton Merle-Smith. He succeeds Dr. D. Stuart Dodge who resigned last June on account of failing health. Dr. Merle-Smith has resigned as trustee of the Union Theological Seminary and as president of the Church Extension Committee of New York City, so he may give all his time without reserve to the new work which he is undertaking. The board plans some new work among the Jews, co-operating with the Synod of Pennsylvania.

Bishop Quayle Suffers Accident.

Bishop Quayle of the Methodist Episcopal church was in Boston attending the general committee meeting of his denomination recently when he suffered a very serious accident, breaking one of his arms in two places by a fall. He left for his home at St. Paul as soon as he could travel and has had to cancel a number of his engagements.

The "Win-My-Chum" Movement.

An evangelistic movement among Methodist churches in the east has sprung up which is called the "Win-My-Chum" movement. The plan is modeled after the "Catch-My-Pal" movement of Ireland except that this is in the field of evangelism instead of temperance. The church has a week of special services during which each member undertakes to bring his own friend into religion. The Schenley Heights Methodist church of Pittsburgh had such success with their week of special effort that they held a second week of services, and were encouraged to let a contract for a new building to be erected this coming year.

Quakers Go to War.

One hundred Quaker young men from the universities of Cambridge and Oxford have left for the front in the present war. They are not going as soldiers but as a special ambulance corps and perhaps will face dangers quite as great as those of the soldier. The equipment and support of these young men is provided by the Quakers of England. They have decided to go to Servia as that country seems to be in greatest need of such care as they can give.

Church Peace Union Offers Prizes.

The Church Peace Union wishes to remind all ministers, divinity students and members of churches and Sunday-schools that the contest for the $5,000 in prizes closes January 1. There has already been a wide response, and from all parts of the United States essays are being submitted for these prizes. The first prize is one of $1,000 for ministers; the next is a series of three prizes, $500, $300 and $200, for divinity students; the other $3,000 is to be divided among young church members and Sunday-school pupils. Detailed information concerning the prizes can be obtained from the office of the Church Peace Union, 70 Fifth avenue, New York City.

European Churches for Peace.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has received an appeal from leaders of Protestant churches in several neutral European countries urging churches throughout the world to strive for peace. The appeal originated with the Rt. Rev. Nathan Soederblom, archbishop of Upsala, Sweden. It is signed by Ostenfeld, bishop of Seeland, Denmark; Gustaf Johani, archbishop of Aabo, Finland; Pastor Leemans, president of the Reformed Church, Holland: Pastor Demoor, president of Dutch Reformed churches, Holland; Pastor Helwig, president Evangelical Lutheran Church, Holland; Pastor Hecker, Amsterdam, president of the Restored Lutheran church, Amsterdam; Jens Tundberg, bishop, Christiania, Norway; Nathan Soederblom; Pastor Ris, Berne, President of Conferences of Reformed Churches of Switzerland, and Pastor Armand Duckert, Geneva, moderator of Company of Pastors. It is signed also by Bishop Joseph Ferencz, Kolozswar, Hungary; Court Preacher Dryander of Berlin, President von Bezzel of Munich, and the Archbishop of Canterbury sent letters explaining that as officials of state churches in belligerent countries they were unable to sign the appeal, but expressed interest in the plan. The text of the appeal follows: "We, servants of Christ, address to all those who have power or influence in the matter, an earnest appeal to keep peace before their eyes, in order that blood-shed soon may cease. The war is causing untold distress. Christ's body, the Church, suffers and mourns. Mankind in its need cries out, 'O Lord, how long?' We remind our Christian brethren of various nations that we cannot sunder the bond of internal union that Christ holds in us. Our faith perceives what the eye cannot see: the strife of nations must finally serve the dispensation of the Almighty, and all the faithful in Christ are one. Let us therefore call upon God that He may destroy hate and enmity and in mercy ordain peace for us. His will be done."

Devise New Charity Device.

Because in many cases money given to needy men is spent in saloons instead of accomplishing its purpose, the Chicago Christian Industrial League of Chicago, operated by the Presbyterians, has issued meal and lodging checks which are sold to business men and given by them to needy men. This brings the needy man under the influence of the church instead of the saloon.

Kill the Christians.

The Mussulman authorities at Beirut, Syria, have organized a war-like mass-meeting. They are exhorting the faithful to slaughter the Christians on the first appearance of hostile fleets. Two Christians have been murdered at Uledjak and the entire population has fled to Smyrna. This news causes anxiety in this country on account of the large company of missionaries in Beirut.

W. C. T. U. Elects President.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union held its national convention in Atlanta, Ga., recently. One of the important duties of the meeting was to secure a new president to take the place of the one who died last spring. Miss Anna A. Gordon of Evanston, Ill., was chosen. She has been acting president during the interim. The national headquarters of this organization are in the historic cottage which Frances Willard spoke of as "Rest Cottage," and which was her home during her lifetime. The career of Miss Gordon has been an interesting one, from the time she volunteered to help Miss Willard as "the little organist" until the present year of promotion to the high position of president of the national organization.

Church Investigator on Colorado.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America through its commission on social service and the rural church has sent an investigator to the strike country in Colorado in the person of Rev. Henry A. Atkinson, who is associate secretary of the organization. This investigator arraigns the mining companies for their attitude to labor. It is charged in the report that the companies have controlled elections and ruled the country through the sheriff. Men have been arrested without due process of the law, and have been held in jail incommunicado. The report states, "The right of workmen to organize has been and is being denied by the un-American and un-Christian attitude of the mine operators, who thus deprive their employes of an essential means of self defense, the right to bargain collectively for their labor." The report on the conditions in Colorado will be issued by the social service commission in booklet form and will soon be ready for public distribution.

The Visitor

There are many signs of the increase of Bible study at present. Considering the improvement of the agencies charged with religious education this is not surprising. No field of teaching has enlisted abler workers than that of Bible-school instruction in recent times. The literature bearing upon the subject amounts to a host of volumes every year, and some of them are of very high merit.

Then there is also that field of Bible study of which the present European war has been the inspiring motive. It is not strange that lovers of the apocalyptic portions of the Bible should set themselves just now to an eager restudy of books like Daniel and Revelation, in the hope of securing therefrom some oracles which may seem to bear upon present events. It is a great day for weird and eccentric treatments of Scripture.

One of the types of organization which has for years been more or less interested in the study of the Bible is the Woman's Club. The programs of these remarkably active and alert bodies include an astonishing variety of themes. They traverse almost the entire gamut of human interest. Art, literature, history, politics, social reform, amusement and technical vocations all seem to find a welcome place within the circle of their concern.

Naturally, therefore, the Bible ought to have now and then a place among the subjects of their study. When the multitude of their interests is considered it would hardly seem possible that a discipline like biblical literature could be omitted. But from the more or less random inclusion of occasional lectures or interpretations dealing with the Bible it would seem that there has come an enlargement of interest in the Great Book, and a deepening of conviction that in the cycle of literary interests with which the Women's Clubs busy themselves the Bible ought to have an assured place.

The Visitor attended not long ago a State Federation of Women's Clubs, for the purpose of presenting the general subject of the Bible as an appropriate and worthful subject for club programs. The interest manifested on that occasion, the subsequent correspondence in reference to opportunities, text books and plans for class work, and the reports of similar interest in other groups of club women, go far to make evident the timeliness of any appeal for the recognition of the Bible in the work of every organization of this kind.

To be sure, the approach which a group of women so leagued together can make to the Bible must be that of literary profit. One could wish, perhaps, that it were a vital concern for the deeper truths of which the Bible is the record. But usually the choice lies between the literary interest and none at all. And here one who wishes to promote the study of the Bible is not permitted to hesitate. For after all, the Bible has a way of teaching its own lessons, no matter what may be the gate through which it is approached.

Moreover, experience has shown that women once interested in the literary beauties of Job and Isaiah are quite likely to go on to the study of the Gospels and the story of the early church. This has been so frequently the case that the value of any kind of group consideration of the literature of the Scripture is no longer to be doubted.

Another illustration of popular interest in the Bible as both literature and life has come to the Visitor's knowledge of late. A group of twelve women in this city meets for the careful study of a book of the Bible once a fortnight. They are women of leisure and culture, social leaders, the sort that one would not select for work of this character. Yet they are willing to pay the price in time and money for this regular instruction, which is given them by an expert in biblical literature.

Furthermore, they pledge themselves to careful private study of the books covered by the lectures, and to the reading of as many volumes of a select bibliography as they are able to secure. The deep interest manifested by these women in the Bible as a whole and the special portions which constitute their studies is ample proof of the attractiveness and value of the volume for any thoughtful circle of modern women.

Rock Island, Illinois, is one of the important gateways of traffic crossing the Mississippi. The three cities of Moline, Davenport and Rock Island are intimately connected by social and business ties. An enormous amount of manufacturing goes on within a circle whose centre is the United States arsenal on the island for which the city is named.

The Disciples have long had an important church in Rock Island. A dozen or more years ago, during the pastorate of Rev. T. W. Grafton, Mrs. Mary Wadsworth, a woman of wealth and devotion, the daughter of the man who was the virtual founder of the church, erected the Mitchell Memorial Church at a cost of about $40,000. Two sisters shared to a certain extent in this fine act of devotion. The Visitor well remembers the dedication of that attractive building, which still remains one of the leading church structures of the city.

A lecture engagement at Augustana College, the Lutheran institution on the hills between Moline and Rock Island, recently took the Visitor back to that city. The church is now prospering under the leadership of Rev. Mitchell E. Chatley. All departments of the work are active. Mrs. Wadsworth still remains devoted as ever to the church. It was a pleasure to meet some of the Rock Island friends again, and to enjoy the hospitality of Brother Chatley's home. H. L. W.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The Problem of Atonement. By W. Arter Wright. A conscientious and enlightened effort to modernize the doctrine of atonement. The author feels the burden of ecclesiastical theory in a region where figures of speech so often did service on the pages of Scripture in the effort to make clear the divine relations with humanity. At bottom most of the terms used in the New Testament to describe the atoning work of Christ are drawn from legal, political or social usages of the time. No one of them expresses all of the vital truth, yet each in turn has been forced to do duty as a dogma. Such terms as propitiation, substitution, justification and sanctification fall in this category, and all have suffered in consequence. The success of this book lies in its rejection of most of the mediaeval conceptions and its effort to put the theme in modern light. Its limitations lie chiefly in the retention of more or less archaic views at certain points of the discussion. (Harriman, Columbus, O., $1.)

Love's Alchemy. By Mary Christine Boorkman. A little pamphlet of helpful suggestions on the Twenty-third Psalm. (A. M. Brookman, Chicago.)

Literary Notes.

The well-known journalist, Samuel G. Blythe, in his recent book, "The Old Game" (Doran) tells why he quit drinking in the following words:

"One of the reasons I quit was because I noticed I was going to funerals oftener than usual—funerals of friends who had been living the same sort of lives for theirs as I had been living for mine. They began dropping off with Bright's disease and other affections superinduced by alcohol; and I took stock of that feature of it rather earnestly. The funerals have not stopped. They have been more frequent in the past three years than in the three years preceding—all good fellows, happy convivial souls; but now dead. Some of them thought that I was foolish to quit too! And there are a few cases of hardening arteries I know about, anda considerable amount of gout and rheumatism, and some other ills, among the gay boys who japed at me for quitting. Gruesome, is it not? And God forbid that I should cast up! But if you quit it in time there will be no production of albumin and sugar, no high blood pressure, no swollen big toes and stiffened joints."

The Fourth Annual Report of the Commission on Christian Union, as presented at Atlanta in October, is now available in printed form and may be had upon application to the president, Rev. Peter Ainslie, D. D., Seminary House, Baltimore, Md. It recites the story of the direct work of the commission in its efforts to further the cause of Christian unity, and presents a hopeful outlook and certain recommendations. It is profitable reading for every Disciple.

The desire for study and training in newspaper work is growing. The University of Missouri has recently inaugurated a School of Journalism. Its purpose is to give practical training and it has for its laboratory a real newspaper office, from which is issued a daily evening newspaper, The University Missourian.

Light Breaking in the Kentucky Mountains

The Story of the Work of John C. C. Mayo.

Any study of Eastern Kentucky must take into consideration the character of the people. So, even at the risk of tiresome iteration, we must recall that until a short time before the Revolutionary War, white settlements in the Colonies were exclusively along the Atlantic seaboard. The Allegheny Mountains for more than one hundred miles rose like a frowning, rocky wall between them and the mysterious region beyond; the one break in it that seemed to be known to the pioneers was Cumberland Gap, at the extreme southeastern end of Kentucky, and through this high-swung mountain gateway began, about 1775, a burst of emigration, that surpassed in magnitude any movement of population of which we have an authentic record. In the main, this advance-guard of western civilization streamed along the narrow trail blazed by Daniel Boone, which was dignified with the name of The Wilderness Road.

THE HARDY PIONEERS.

Only the bravest and hardiest ventured on that journey of unspeakable dangers and difficulty; and while the great majority of them pressed on to the plains beyond, yet a number stopped in the pleasant hollows and valleys of Eastern Kentucky. They could not know the region as we do now, fenced in with mountains, with no inland lakes, and no navigable streams either for entrance or exit. It is from such heroic pioneer stock as this, that many of our Kentucky highlanders are descended.

For nearly a quarter of a century, Eastern Kentucky was the great path zone from the East to the West, and these early settlers were then in touch with the life of their day. How this great rush of emigration turned gradually from the Wilderness Road to the Ohio River is another story, too long to be told here. Suffice it to say, that early in the nineteenth century, the mountain region ceased to be the highway of travel, and the people flung there by this tidal wave of emigration were shut off from the outside world by the natural barriers about them. The following generations lost that wonderful impulse to press into new and unknown lands, which had possessed their fathers; the result was a century of isolation, and a people suffering from arrested development brought about by conditions without a parallel anywhere else in our land.

THE POVERTY OF THE PEOPLE.

Only two results of this long seclusion need be mentioned—their poverty, and their illiteracy.

The valley farms of the first settlers were an ample domain for them; but the patriarchal size of their families made a rapid increase in population, and it soon became necessary to cultivate the thin, rocky soil of the steep hillsides. The consequence has been a hard, grinding poverty that was almost universal; a report of the State auditor, issued a few years ago, stated that practically all of the mountain counties were pauper counties, —that is, they received more from the State treasury, than they returned to it in taxation.

For many years it had been known vaguely that Eastern Kentucky was rich in coal, timber and minerals, and that the two things needed to unlock this hidden wealth was capital and transportation; but until the past few years, no one had arisen who could give accurate, convincing information, and furnish the constructive business ability to plan for the development of this hermit part of the State.

JOHN C. C. MAYO.

It is a matter of pride to all who believe in the people of Eastern Kentucky, that a mountain man performed this great task. John C. C. Mayo came of good Virginia stock; he was born on a little mountain farm, and the meager living of the family was dug from its sterile acres. The only education that he was able to get was from the public schools, and from a small Methodist college; but he learned his greatest lesson from the sermons in the stones, the tongues in the trees, and the books in the running brooks of his mountain home.

As soon as he was able to get a certificate, he began to teach, and he walked to his schools, he saw the coal and minerals cropping out of the hills, and the splendid hardwood timber growing on them. He believed in its development with all the passion and the prescience of a prophet, and set about bringing it to pass with the genius of the born man of affairs. He saved every cent he could spare from his slender salary as a school teacher, and bought options on coal, timber, and mineral lands; all the money he could borrow went the same way. He not only believed in the wealth of his section, but he believed in John C. C. Mayo; this gave him a power to present his plans to others that was all but irresistible, and a faith that could remove mountains. From the start he planned big business; he approached great capitalists and railroad magnates with perfect confidence, and nearly always made them see things with his eyes. It took long patience and perseverance to make his dreams come true—but the results read like a fairy tale.

Until a few years ago, the richest coal section in Kentucky was a railroad desert; within a brief space of time three great trunk lines, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Chesapeake and Ohio, and the Louisville and Nashville have completed extensions into this treasure house of mineral, timber, coal, oil, and gas. Great corporations have invested millions of dollars in the purchase of land, the erection of great plants, and in the building of cities.

JENKINS A MODERN TOWN.

The terminal of the Baltimore and Ohio is Jenkins. When it was three years old, there was a population of seventy-five hundred people. Neither expense nor trouble has been spared to provide for the health, the comfort, and the social betterment of those who work in the mills and mines. A model bakery, a model abattoir, an unfailing supply of pure water, an electric plant for light and power, a fine hotel, a hospital the equal of any, a club house, a Young Men's Christian Association building, and first-class schools are some of the features of this magic city.

Just on the other side of the mountains is McRoberts, the terminus of the Louisville and Nashville, built on the same enlightened and magnificent scale: a tunnel will soon connect the two places, and railway systems. Other wonder towns in the same region are Fleming, located near Lonesome Pine, made famous by John Fox's novel and play: Wayland, Garrett, McGregor, Hemphill.

A WORK OF LOVE.

There is a tinge of sadness in the fact that Mr. Mayo did not live to be a leading factor in the fulfillment of his splendid visions. When he died, less than fifty years old, he was the greatest business genius that Kentucky had produced. While he worked for love of his section with such power and success, it is pleasant to know that he reaped a fortune of many millions for himself,—the first great fortune ever built by a Kentuckian from the resources of his own State. He was unspoiled by success, and died the same simple, kindly mountaineer, as when he taught a little country school twenty-five years before. He continued to live in Paintsville where he had been brought up, and spent money lavishly in making it beautiful, and contributing to the education, the comfort, and the social service of his people.

THE NEW DAY IN EASTERN KENTUCKY.

The splendid new industrial development in Eastern Kentucky, and the State-wide campaign to wipe out illiteracy before the taking of the next United States Census, mean the passing of the twin evils, poverty and ignorance, that have held the mountain people in a century of bondage. Already we have an earnest of a new day in social ideals there. Practically all that section is local option territory; the feud is a thing of the past, and mountain counties are becoming as law-abiding as any in the State. Boone Logan, of Pineville, who broke up the famous Craig-Tolliver feud in Rowan County twenty-seven years ago, was quoted in the September, 1914, Lexington daily papers as saying, "A man who shoots or kills another in the mountains now is almost certain to serve a long term in the penitentiary, or go to the electric chair; our people are alive to the necessity for having good order in Eastern Kentucky."

THE HERALD OF A NEW DAY.

While we rejoice at this coming prosperity and enlightenment, yet the thing that stirs us most deeply is that these new movements originated among the mountain people. When we think of John C. C. Mayo, a poor mountain teacher, starting enterprises that not only mean a new commercial era in his section, but in his State, when we think of that band of teachers in Rowan County, whose work shines out like a light from a dark place, surely we may say that the mountain people of today are true sons and daughters of their pioneer ancestry! And when we remember that almost every one of these fifty young men and women received their training at our Morehead Normal school, we can say of them, as the Jews said of the Centurion, "They are worthy for whom we have done this."

[The Moonlight Schools and their part in eliminating illiteracy in Eastern Kentucky, will be considered next week.]

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR DECEMBER 20.

Luke 24:50-53, Acts 1:1-11. Memory Verses, 10, 11.
Golden Text.—He was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. Acts 1:9.
American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

Luke 24. (50) And he led them out until they were over against Bethany: and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them. (51) And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he parted from them, and was carried up into heaven. (52) And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy: (53) and were continually in the temple, blessing God.

Acts 1. (1) The former treatise I made, O Theophilus, concerning all that Jesus began both to do and to teach, (2) until the day in which he was received up, after that he had given commandment through the Holy Spirit unto the apostles whom he had chosen: (3) to whom he also showed himself alive after his passion by many proofs, appearing unto them by the space of forty days, and speaking the things concerning the kingdom of God: (4) and, being assembled together with them, he charged them not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father, which, said he, ye heard from me: (5) for John indeed baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized in the Holy Spirit not many days hence.

(6) They therefore, when they were come together, asked him, saying, Lord, dost thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel? (7) And he said unto them, It is not for you to know times or seasons, which the Father hath set within his own authority. (8) But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you: and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. (9) And when he had said these things, as they were looking, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. (10) And while they were looking stedfastly into heaven as he went, behold two men stood by them in white apparel; (11) who also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye looking into heaven? this Jesus, who was received up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye beheld him going into heaven.

VERSE BY VERSE.

(From the Teacher's Guide.)

v. 50-53. They worshipped him. There was no longer any doubt in their minds about the Deity of Jesus.—Returned with great joy.. Because they knew that they had not lost their Lord, that his promise was true, he would be with them always.—And were continually in the temple blessing God. There were stated hours for worship, and at these hours they were there.

v. Acts 1.1. The former treatise. The Gospel of Luke.—O Theophilus. Most excellent Theophilus, Lk. 1.3. Because the title "most excellent" (a phrase corresponding, perhaps, to the English phrase "your Excellency") belonged to Romans of high rank, it is inferred that he was a citizen of Rome, but nothing is known about him.—All that Jesus began both to do and to teach. The Gospel of Luke records the beginning of Christ's work, the part that he carried on on earth; the Acts records the accomplishment of the work of the Ascended Christ through his disciples.

v. 2-3. Until the day in which he was received up. Last three verses of Luke.—After that he had given commandment through the Holy Spirit. Mt. 28.19, 20; Mk. 16.15-18; Lk. 24.49; Jn. 20.21-23; 21. 15-17.—After his passion. His suffering in Gethsemane and on the cross. Our word passion comes from the Latin passio, suffering.—By the space of forty days. At intervals during forty days.

v. 4-5. To wait for the promise of the Father. The promised gift of the Holy Spirit which was to be given at Pentecost: Lk. 24.49; Jn. 15.26.—John. John the Baptist.—Baptized with water. See Lk. 3.16: Jn. 3.5.—Not many days hence. Ten days intervened between the Ascension and the baptism in the Holy Spirit on Pentecost.

v. 6. Dost thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel? Once more they ask the old question. "It needed the Pentecostal outpouring of the Holy Spirit to teach the Apostles that the Christ's Kingdom is not of this world."

v. 8. Ye shall be my witnesses. The whole Book of the Acts is a record of the fulfillment of this commission.—In Jerusalem. Their work there is told in chapters 1-6.—In all Judea. As used here, Judea means Palestine without Samaria.—And Samaria. A revocation of the temporary limitation to the Jews. The work in Judea and Samaria is told in chapters 8-11.18.—Unto the uttermost part of the earth. Represented by Rome, the capital of the Empire, the place where, as Irenæus said, "All meet from every quarter." The record is given in 11.19-28.30.

v. 9. A cloud received him out of their sight. Chrysostom calls it "the royal chariot." See John 6.62. "The visible and corporeal Ascension does not necessarily imply that heaven is a place situated above the clouds. The object of the Ascension was not to indicate where or what heaven is, but to assure the Apostles by an unmistakable sign that Jesus had entered it."

v. 10-11. Two men in white apparel. This is the usual way in which angels are described, white being the emblem of heavenly purity. See John 20.12—Why stand ye looking into heaven? Such idle gazing is fruitless.—In like manner. His going was a disappearing, a withdrawal from sight: his coming is an appearing, a manifesting of himself.

The Crowned Victor

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

Thus we come to the close of this wonderful year in the study of the life of our Lord. What a few things we have touched upon! How few there are that have been handed down. John in a moment of enthusiasm exclaimed that the world would not contain the books if all of the things which Jesus did had been written down. How poor we are! Why did not more men write down more things? How we should like to know more of the words and deeds of the Son of Man. But men then were as men are now. They were unresponsive. They made light of their opportunities and the world is the poorer. Even we are not transmitting all that we might.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

GLORIFICATION.

In the Oberammergau Passion Play when Jesus appears at the door of the tomb he possesses a spiritual body. The old familiarity is gone. He is transfigured. Thus also, consistently, in the ascension scene. The ascension marks the enthronement of the triumphant Christ. He has suffered, now he may reign. It is a fitting climax to the life of Christ. It marks his elevation. We grow confused when we try to think where he is now. We are told that heaven is partly a place and partly a state. Wherever it is or whatever it is, there Jesus is. In the great spiritual realm which is just beyond us, into which we are evolving. The realm just next ahead. In this realm of the spirit Jesus lives and loves. He is exalted but he touches our lives and lifts us up.

OVERCOMING.

"To him that overcometh, I will give to sit with me in my throne." All of the rewards are for those who overcome. The college athlete is rewarded for self-denial and self-expression. High honors and great powers are conferred upon those who overcome. Fine bodies, keen minds, great souls are the rewards of overcoming. To struggle, to deny one's self, to fight and then to win and receive the victor's crown—that is real life.

"The prize, the prize secure,
The athlete almost fell,
Bare all he could endure,
And bare not always well.
But he may smile at trials gone
Who lays the victor's garland on."

"Safe home, safe home in port
Rent cordage, shattered deck,
Torn sail, provisions short,
And only not a wreck,—
But they may smile upon the shore
Who tell their voyage perils o'er."

THE CROWNED VICTOR.

We have been studying about the humiliation of Christ. We have seen him betrayed, mocked, scourged, spat upon, hung upon a tree. We have seen him buried as a seed in the soil. Here we see him glorified. It is the true process of all life. Think not that you will wear the crown unless you suffer here. Dr. Edward Judson has shown us how all that we enjoy is the result of the suffering of another, and how all that we suffer will mean the joy of someone else. We are made perfect through suffering. If Christ, our Lord, was made perfect in that way, why should we complain when the load of the cross cuts and crushes down into our shoulders?

A PROPER ENDING.

One of the brilliant men of America has written a book about Jesus and at the end leaves Jesus hanging in defeat upon the cross. Jesus dies as any man might and the story closes. But not so the Bible. The ascension crowns with glory the earthly career of Jesus, our Lord. He entered human life in the lowly manger; he rises to the world of the spirit from among his adoring followers. Angels and shepherds celebrated his coming; disciples and angels mark his leaving. Shepherds and fishermen—the Christ of the common people can use us also. Humanity melts away, divinity endures forever.

ROAD SONG.

These to be thankful for: a friend,
A work to do, a way to wend,
And these in which to take delight:
The wind that turns the poplars white;
Wonder and gleam of common things—
Sunlight upon a sea gull's wings,
Odors of earth and dew-drenched lawns,
The pageantry of darks and dawns;
Blue vistas of a city street
At twilight; music; passing feet;
The thrill of spring, half joy, half pain,
The deep voice of the autumn rain—
Shall we not be content with these Imperishable mysteries,
And, jocund-hearted, take our share
Of joy and pain, and find life fair?
Wayfarers on a road where we Set forth each day right valiantly;
Expectant, dauntless, blithe, content
To make the Great Experiment.

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 16.

The Reign of Peace. Is. 11:1-9; John 14:27-31; Col. 3:12-15.

How has the preacher of peace fared during the year 1914? Have events demonstrated that he is a fool? Ought he to be put into an institution for the irresponsible? Whatever the rest of mankind may think of him, he seems to entertain a good opinion of himself. He does not believe that his utterances have been discredited. War supplies him arguments for his cause. A game in which every player loses condemns itself.

A NEW PATRIOTISM.

For generations it has been esteemed a glorious thing to destroy the enemies of one's country. It is beginning to dawn upon the minds of some men that the most glorious thing one can do is to help make his nation just. "National fighting is still a part of the accepted order, held in a certain honor, carefully provided for by all the leading peoples; yet personal brawls have come to be regarded as lapses from the approved course, and unbefitting a gentleman. Is this difference of feeling and judgment destined to pass away? The history of mental progress gives an absolute assurance that this difference will pass away.

PEACEFUL EMULATION.

If we must use the fighting instinct, are there not beneficial ways of using it? Sir Oliver Lodge thinks there are. "Then why should we continue our rivalry into this illogical and brutal extremity? The only excuse that can be made is that our ancestors did it. But our ancestors had no other way of competing; practically they only came into contact with foreign nations for the sake of bloodshed and plunder. But engineering progress has made travel and international intercourse easy, and we can go abroad now with more facility than they could travel across England. Language is still a barrier, and is responsible for many misunderstandings, but in all essentials it is easy now to be on friendly terms with every civilized nation. We trade together, we study the same problems, and encounter the same natural difficulties. In thousands of ways we can help each other, in one way and one way alone can we do each other serious damage. Exertion is good, and fighting is strenuous exertion, but why not fight now solely by means of organization and enterprise and scientific skill?

THE MISSION OF THE UNITED STATES.

The lie that nations must arm themselves in order to insure the peace of the world is now seen to be a lie. The man who carries a pistol is more likely to shoot his neighbor than the man who goes unarmed. And the nation that spends its substance on armies and navies will engage in war more readily than the nation that spends its money on education and science. This would seem to be plain enough for even a fool to understand. But the nations have to be taught some very simple lessons. "If the United States has a mission," said Mr. Taft when he was president, "besides developing the principles of the brotherhood of man into a living, palpable force, it seems to me that it is to blaze the way to universal arbitration among the nations, and bring them into more complete amity than ever before existed. It is known to the world that we do not covet the territory of our neighbors, or seek the acquisition of lands on other continents. We are free of such foreign entanglements as frequently conduce to embarrassing complications, and the efforts we make in behalf of international peace cannot be regarded with a suspicion of ulterior motives."

Ps. 122:6; 128:5, 6; Isa. 62:1, 32:2, 17-18; 48:18; 54:13; Rom. 12:18; 1 Tim. 2:2; 2 Tim. 2:22; Jas. 3:17-18; 1 Pet. 3:10-11.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

THE CONTINENT (PRESBYTERIAN).

The Meaning of Baptism, by Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of The Christian Century. It required courage to publish this book. It is by a minister of the Disciple Church, which has been peculiarly strenuous in behalf of the scriptural necessity for immersion, and he writes "that the effect of our study is absolutely to break down the notion that any divine authority whatsoever stands behind the practice of immersion." Instead, in the New Tesament baptism means simply the conferment and acceptance of the status of a Christian. He is strongly against rebaptism of Christian believers who apply to Baptist or Disciple churches for membership, having been accepted in other churches by any mode of baptism whatever. Equally he opposes infant baptism, because the subject of baptism must be voluntary. At the root of his argument lies a sound desire for Christian unity.

CENTRAL CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE (METHODIST.)

Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, has brought together in a book a series of editorials in that bright paper on the mode of baptism. Dr. Morrison belongs to what might be called the younger school of Disciples, who have the discretion and the will to approach the members of other churches, not with the club of intolerance and pseudo omniscience, but with the open hand of intellectual catholicity and good will.

Historically the Disciples think they are raised up to form a bond of union between Christians, whereby all Christendom can become one in response to the Saviour's prayer. Such regard their chief mission, perhaps, to be, by doing away with creeds and standing simply on the Bible, to render denominationalism obsolete, furnishing in its stead an open, free, creedless platform on which all who love the Lord Jesus may get together, each still exercising his conscientious liberty. It is a praiseworthy idea; and, looked at from its deeper side, it deserves prayerful consideration. Why should there not be a place where all Christians may unite into one body?

When it comes to the practical application of these catholic and brotherly principles, however, the welcome of any Christian, presumably, without exacting from him the surrender of his intelligent convictions, we are confronted with the most mandatory and bitter dogmatists in Christendom—that is, in the old school—dogmatists who are fighters, propagandists, hard shells as regards matters of belief, a class who crowd forward their numbers by denunciation and contempt. Everybody who has had any experience with the old-fashioned Campbellites knows that. We have never met religionists so bigoted or so caustic as those older promoters of this fine aspiration; and we know of nothing in modern history more ironical than their assumptions and their endeavors to "draw" men to them by flourishing denunciations and imitating infallibility. Yes, truly, it has been interesting.

But there is a younger school of Disciples who really wish to concede that religious freedom they stand for, who do not brandish sarcasm for the learning or convictions of others, but ask only the fundamental beliefs as the touchstone of membership.

To this school Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison belongs, and the propaganda could not wish for a leader more truly representative; a profound scholar, a deeply spiritual follower of the Master, a man among men, something of a mystic, we could well believe that if any person could show the way to Christian unity, Charles Clayton Morrison belongs to the select few.

This book gives one evidence. Personally, Dr. Morrison holds that immersion is the correct mode of administering baptism, but he adds: "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." That statement, as a creedal form, would be entirely acceptable to many Methodists. He says: "Among my own people, the Disciples of Christ, I am frank to say that this dogma of immersion (by this I do not mean the practice of immersion) has been like a ten-cent piece held before the eye, shutting out the sun." The significant fact is that the author is a member of an immersion church—the Disciples of Christ—once commonly known as Campbellites; and, while he holds to immersion as the correct mode of baptizing, yet he declares: "It would be too much to say, dogmatically, that baptism was not administered in New Testament times in any way save by immersion." He is opposed to rebaptism, as practiced by the Baptists and others, declaring: "Such a procedure is the very essence of sectarianism. Indeed, it may properly be called congregational Phariseeism." He is opposed to infant baptism, but thinks it proper to dedicate little children to God publicly without baptism.

The book is well worth reading, not only for its scholarly treatment of the question of baptism, which is satisfactory, but as an example of true liberality in modern church life, a liberality which is not degrading and flat, but catholic, appreciative and noble. $1.35.

THE RELIGIOUS TELESCOPE

(United Brethren.)

"The Meaning of Baptism," by Charles Clayton Morrison. Cloth, 222 pages. Disciples Publication Society, Chicago. In this volume the author offers a positive ground upon which those who have become indifferent to the baptism question may stand, a thesis on the subject which resolves from it all elements of legalism and arbitrariness and revives it as a preachable subject for the modern minister. He shows from Alexander Campbell's own New Testament that he was in error in his interpretation of baptism, and that that error was costly and fundamental, even to the point of misleading the movement for Christian unity, of which he was the recognized champion, in his teaching on that subject. The author is clear and candid, brave and kind in performing the task to which he assigned himself, maintaining the principle of loyalty in criticising a dogma which, in his judgment, obscures the historic ideals of the church. Moreover, as we view the real meaning of this new interpretation of baptism, it involves a complete abandonment of the dogma of immersion, and may lead to a new adjustment of attitude on that subject on the part of other immersionist bodies. At any rate, the significance of the work is new and remarkable. It may help the immersionists and the affusionists to get together, which would be a great achievement.

Disciples Table Talk

John P. Sala Leaves Dayton.

John P. Sala of Central Church, Dayton, O., has accepted a call to succeed R. H. Miller as pastor of Richmond Ave. Church in Buffalo. His work at Dayton has been very marked in its success. The membership of the Dayton church has doubled in four years and a new church has been organized at Middletown which has three hundred members. The Buffalo church has an educational director who is a trained Y. M. C. A. man. It has institutional features and has a membership of about four hundred. Mr. Sala is a graduate of Bethany College and had two years of theological work at Oberlin College.

Iowa Disciples Honored at Election.

The Disciples have been highly honored in the recent Iowa state election. Gov. Geo. W. Clarke, a staunch Disciple, member of the church at Adel, has been re-elected governor of the great state of Iowa. Geo. E. Brammer, Sunday-school superintendent of Central Church, Des Moines, has been elected representative of Polk County as its representative in the next legislature. Hubert Utterback, one of the deacons of University Place Church, was elected one of the judges of the district court of Polk county, being promoted from the office of police judge. Joseph E. Meyer, one of Central Church's greatly beloved sons, was appointed by Mayor Hanna police judge to succeed Judge Utterback.

Model Bible School Building.

The Central Church of Lexington, Ky., has just completed a model Bible school building which will be dedicated soon. On the first floor are all the executive offices, the classification secretary's office and the director's office, which is arranged with electric buttons so that he can summon any teacher or superintendent in the building. The primary and junior departments are also on the first floor. The second floor contains a large reception room and quarters for the intermediate department and adults. The third floor is for seniors, the normal department and recreation purposes.

Every-Member Canvass.

Instead of the annual call for contributions to missions at Linwood Boulevard Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., it has been decided in the future to follow the plan of the "Every-Member Canvass." The afternoon of December 6 has been set aside as visiting day. Every family in the church will be visited on that afternoon by some one. The purpose of this visiting will be to come into closer touch with the members and increase the church attendance, also to ascertain for the coming year the amount of each person's contribution both to current expenses and to benevolences. Following this plan, the duplex envelopes will be adopted, and the members will hand in their contributions by the week or by the month, as they choose; contributions to current expenses in one envelope, and contributions to missions and benevolences in the other. Thus all the regular donations of the church will be taken care of without a public appeal. At a meeting on Tuesday evening, Nov. 24, one hundred men were present, of whom seventy-five volunteered their services as visitors. It is expected that a hundred men will make the canvass, going by twos in fifty motor cars offered for the purpose. Thus all the members of the church will be visited in one afternoon. They aim to raise $15,000 for next year's budget and at least $3,000 for missions. The Official Board has taken steps toward the publication for free distribution of a number of Dr. Jenkins' sermons. One of these appears in this issue of The Christian Century.

Why Does Not God Aid Belgians?

A familiar form of religious question in Canada this autumn has been "Why does not God aid the Belgians?" This query became the topic for a sermon by Gifford Ernest in the church of the Disciples at St. Thomas, Ont., Nov. 22. He took the point of view that God works through human agencies and that He is coming to the aid of the Belgians.

An Evangelistic Pastor.

J. W. Darby, pastor at Washington, Ind., has been holding his own evangelistic meetings for the past three years. The first year, the church received 195 new members. The second year, there were 121. In a meeting just closed, there were 154 additions, making a total of 181 new members in 1914, and a total for three years of 497. In the recent effort, the men of the church canvassed the community and on the basis of the canvass did personal work for the meeting.

connections with the history of the Disciples. He was converted under the preaching of Alexander Campbell and heard the Campbell-Purcell debate. He organized three churches, as it was his custom to start a prayer-meeting in his house whenever he moved to a community where the Disciples had no church. These churches were at Fort Scott, Kans.; Omaha, Neb.; and Deadwood, S. Dakota. He debated against the Mormons in Iowa and helped to move them from that state. During the cholera epidemic in Cincinnati he was prominent among those nursing the victims. He retired from active life in 1880 and was 92 years old at the time of his death. The Sunday before Christmas will be observed generally among Disciple churches as the day for taking the offering for the Board of Ministerial Relief. The great enterprises in this department of church work that are on foot in other communions will doubtless have a reflex influence upon the Disciples. The Sunday schools of the brotherhood will in many cases use the exercise called "White Gifts for the King," and give the money to the old ministers.

The church at Corning, Ia., has observed Nov. 22 as automobile day in their church. All the shut-ins and those in feeble health were taken to church on that Sunday. It has been supposed that the automobile was a great enemy to religion but this shows the way to "convert" the machine and use it for helping the church. Hugh C. Guy is pastor.

A Cheap Church Bulletin.

Churches everywhere have felt the need of a printed bulletin for announcements and to disseminate information, but many churches have not felt they could afford the cost. The church at St. Thomas, Ont., has a plan for a neat bulletin at a minimum of cost. The outside cover is printed several thousand copies at one time. The inside is filled in from week to week by a mimeograph. On account of the attractive cover, the total effect is very pleasing.

Evangelism at Hot Springs, Ark.

The church at Hot Springs, Ark., has recently gone through an evangelistic meeting with their pastor, G. D. Serrill, leading. Most of the additions came from the Sunday-school. This is because the Sunday-school plans its work with the evangelistic motive strongly to the fore. The year's work has been better than might have been expected under the circumstances.

Transylvania suffered defeat but once during the season, and never at the hands of an Association team. President Crossfield says that he regards the success of the season as secondary to the high quality of the men composing the team. Preach in City Court.

The Fife brothers who are holding a meeting in Terre Haute, Ind., preached in the City Court on a recent morning. Following this, they went over to the county jail and held another service.

Church Helps Hospital.

The church at Goshen, Ind., has recently held a social in which supplies were gathered for the local hospital. Large quantities of food were taken over to the Goshen Hospital.

D. R. Dungan in Colorado.

D. R. Dungan, who was for many years a teacher of the Bible among the Disciples, but who is now retired, has lately settled at Eureka Springs, Col., where he will make his home for a time.

Another Disciple Author.

Interest in journalism and literature is growing among the Disciples. Among the new laborers in this field to secure general recognition is Mrs. Georgetta Witter Waters, who contributes an article to the November issue of the McClure's Magazine. She has been a frequent contributor to journals in recent years. She is a graduate of the class of 1898 at Drake University.

"Happy Wednesday Nights."

Rockford, Ill., church of which W. B. Clemmer is pastor, has what they call "Happy Wednesday Nights." A fifteen-cent luncheon is served at 6:30. At seven there is a Sunday-school workers' training class. Following this, there are twenty minutes given to the subject, "Teachers and Teaching." Then there is a 25-minute study of the international lesson by the pastor. At eight o'clock there are sectional conferences, prayer-meeting and choir practice in separate rooms.

Geo. L. Snively Raises Big Debt.

The church at Shelbyville, Tenn., has long been oppressed by a debt on their property of $8,500. On November 1, Geo. L. Snively took pledges for twelve thousand dollars to wipe out the debt and take care of some other needs. There have been thirteen additions in a short meeting held by Mr. Snively.

Kentucky School of Methods.

The Bible-school workers of Kentucky are to hold a school of methods from Nov. 30 to Dec. 4 in Murray, Ky. W. E. Frazee will conduct classes for the adult workers. Marion Stevenson will teach religious pedagogy. Studies in the books of the Bible will be given by Mr. Stevenson in the evening.

Pictures for the Church.

The church at Terre Haute, Ind., is not afraid of violating former Protestant tradition by bringing pictures into the church building. The Primary Department of this church now has a beautiful picture entitled "Jesus Blessing the Children," which was placed there as a memorial of Ralph Ladd, a former pupil in this department.

Indianapolis Bible-Schools' Plan.

The Bible-schools of Indianapolis have adopted a standard for the coming year which has five cardinal points. They are (1) Monthly or Weekly meeting of officers with a program for study. (2) Annual promotion day with a program. (3) Systematic missionary instruction and giving. (4)Systematic temperance instruction and pledge signing. (5) Systematic enrollment and recording. Under the latter head they propose not to enroll a pupil who has not been present three consecutive Sundays and to place on the absent list and refuse to count as active members those who have failed to attend for four consecutive Sundays.

Fresno Church Almost Finished.

Work is progressing rapidly on the First Church building at Fresno, Cal., and the plasterers are now finishing their task. The building when finished will represent an expenditure of sixty thousand dollars. It is expected that the building will be completed by Christmas and will be ready for occupancy by the first of the new year.

Russian Christians Go to War.

The members of the Evangelical Christian churches of Russia who are affiliated with the Disciples through their Commission on Foreign Relations, have in many cases enlisted in the army and gone to the front to fight for their country. This has greatly crippled the forces in the struggling churches of the movement. Fifty men have left the Petrograd church—some of them preachers of the gospel. Preachers Prokhanoff, Matweef and Tresnoff are still at the task. The Petrograd church has taken up a collection of a thousand rubles for the Committee of Our Empress, which is designed to help wounded soldiers. The college in Petrograd was opened on Nov. 1, which was somewhat late on account of the above mentioned circumstances. Pastor Zebrowski reports that at Warsaw, during August and September, he baptized 25 persons and that there is great want in his city on account of the war. Mr. Zebrowski is supported by Mr. Murray of Brenham, Tex.

W. H. Boles Mobbed Again.

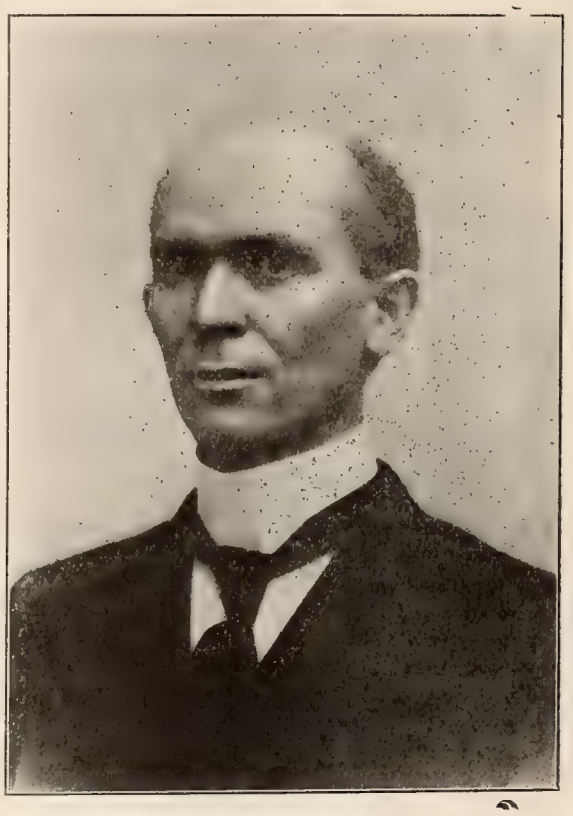
Being mobbed seems quite a common occurence with W. H. Boles of Marion, Ill., who delivers anti-Catholic lectures. It happened last in Minneapolis. There were pistol shots and broken heads on both sides.

A Prayer-Meeting Contest.

The zeal for numbers is invading the prayer-meetings for we note that there is a prayer-meeting contest on between Girard, Ill., and Girard, Kans. The points in the contest are the number in attendance, the number of Bibles, and the percentage taking part.

Los Angeles and Vicinity

The joint board of the Los Angeles, Cal., churches held a farewell banquet for F. W. Burnham on the evening of Nov. 23, on account of his leaving Wilshire Boul. Church to become the secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. The pastors and members of the joint board and their wives made a company of 150 people. The banquet was held in First Church, of which Russell Thrapp is pastor. S. M. Cooper was toastmaster. The speakers were Mr. Abberley of Magnolia Ave. Church, F. M. Dowling of Fullerton Church, and F. W. Burnham, in whose honor the banquet was given.



Frank G. Tyrrell, who will return to the ministry.

After the banquet, there was a fellowship service in the main auditorium of the church to which the general public was admitted. At this meeting, Mr. Burnham made a declaration of the principles that would guide him in his secretarial career. He declared himself loyal to the Disciples but expressed a conviction that we must have more of the spirit of fellowship with other bodies. He deplored the theological controversies and favored a middle course in these matters. With regard to home missions, he expressed a purpose to stress city work more. He said we should plan to take a few important centers and put enough men and money in these centers to make ourselves felt.

Frank G. Tyrrell was present at the meeting and declared that a year under the ministry of F. W. Burnham had inspired him to go back to the ministry and preach every Sunday once more. He is now a lawyer. The meeting closed with resolutions of a most complimentary sort, which were tendered the departing pastor.

News from Richmond, Va.

At the solicitation of the officers and teachers of the Seventh St. Christian Sunday-school, Richmond, Va., a valuable Sunday-school Manual, for the guidance of this school, has been prepared by the pastor, H. D. C. Maclachlan. This manual is a model of thoroughness. Every detail of the organization and management is considered, and the work of each department of the school is fully outlined—course of study, programs for opening and closing exercises, missionary and social service activities, etc. One of the significant provisions of the manual is this: The last Wednesday night in each month shall be Sunday-school night. At 6:30 o'clock, departmental conferences (with devotional, business and study periods) are held, each department meeting in a separate room. At 7:30 all departments come together around a supper-table and enjoy a social hour. From 8:15 to 9:00, there is a general conference of officers and teachers. From 9:00 to 9:45, there is a session of the superintendent's cabinet—the general officers of the school and the superintendents of departments. Once a quarter, in addition to the foregoing, the Sunday-school Board, composed of officers of the church and representatives from the school, have a meeting at 6:30 o'clock.

The Seventh St. Christian Church, Richmond, Va., is touching the life of the community as never before in its history. There is an organized social service circle, through which various forms of uplifting influences are set in motion and practical Christianity is exemplified. The Juvenile Court of the city, the Associated Charities, the home for abandoned, neglected and orphaned children, the Nurses' Settlement, the hospitals—in fact, every agency for charitable or humane purposes, every movement for the prevention of evil and every form of rescue work find strong allies in Seventh St. Church. The factory girls are being helped by an organization of Camp Fire Girls. The Baraca Class of the Sunday-school conducts a boys' club in one of the slum districts, and the mothers of these boys have manifested their interest. The class will probably soon open a mission Sunday-school in this same section. One of the Philathea classes maintains a room at the Sheltering Arms Hospital, and besides this is rendering a large amount of service to the poor and the sick and the outcast. A motion picture machine has been installed, which will be used among other purposes for reaching the newsboys—a weekly Saturday afternoon entertainment being contemplated for them.

On the third Monday in November, at the regular weekly meeting of the ministers of the Disciples of Christ in Richmond, Va., and vicinity, held at Seventh St. Church, Dr. W. C. James, minister of the Grove Ave. Baptist Church of the city, by invitation, spoke at length, and profitably for all present, on "Some of the Preacher's Problems."

Columbia Disciples Organized.

About five years ago, the Acropolis Club was organized at Columbia University and was to include the university students as well as the students of the Union Theological Seminary. This club met on November 6 and elected the following officers for the college year: President, Prof. Roscoe R. Hill; vice-president, H. I. Croyle; secretary-treasurer, Miss Floy V. Gilmore. The chief object of the club is to promote sociability among the members. The officers of the club are asking Disciples everywhere to let them know of students arriving at the university.

Numbering the People.

The churches at Leavenworth, Kans., desiring to know more accurately with regard to their duties and responsibilities arranged for a census of their city on an interdenominational basis recently and nearly eight thousand homes were visited. Prominent among the workers in this important enterprise were those of the Disciples church.

Thomas A. Boyer at Portland.

The First Church at Portland, Ore., has invited Thomas A. Boyer of Oakland, Cal., to visit them with a view to accepting the pastorate. He was there on November 8, and a call will probably be extended. He has been for twelve years pastor at Oakland and two years ago a great building was erected which is already crowded on special occasions. It is not known what the attitude of Mr. Boyer would be to such a call.

Farming Taught at Eureka.

A very important step is being taken in Eureka College in the matter of community work. During the third week in December (Dec. 14-19, 1914), there is to be conducted a short course in Agriculture and Household Science. This course is to be put on under the auspices of the University of Illinois Extension Deuartment and is to be managed and promoted by Eureka College. The course will be very similar to the short course conducted every year at the University of Illinois. However, it will not be as long nor as extensive. While the course is being promoted by the authorities of Eureka College, it is not to be a strictly college affair. The whole community is to be enlisted and the course is to be conducted for the general good of the community and not for any personal gain on the part of the college. Eureka College has but one purpose in the enterprise and that is to be useful to the community in which it is located. This, too, is the ideal of the Extension Department of the university and the authorities of that institution have shown a remarkable willingness to co-operate in this undertaking.

The course of instruction will include crops, soils, grain selection, horticulture, animal husbandry, dairying, poultry raising, household economics, domestic science, etc. The forenoons of the week will be given over to class-room and lecture work. The afternoons will be devoted to actual practice in the judging of horses, swine, cattle and poultry. There will also be demonstrations in tree pruning and spraying, corn judging, cooking, etc. There will be no entrance requirements and anyone who cares to take the course will be privileged to do so. The aim is to benefit the largest possible number.

The corps of instructors are all experts in the subject with which they have to deal. Dean Davenport, of the University of Illinois, a man of national reputation, will be present part of the time. Professors Nolan, Bauer, Wells, Miller, Hieronymus, Percival and Bunch, all from the university, are to be on the staff. R. P. Shepherd, of Chicago, secretary of the Illinois Bible-school Association, and a good Disciple, has also been engaged for addresses on the educational side of the community's life. Mr. E. T. Robbins, the agricultural adviser of Tazewell County, will be present and at least a half-day will be given to the discussion of the county adviser's work. Other instructors not yet decided upon will be added to the faculty. The science department of Eureka College will also be represented through the department heads. In addition to the class-room work and demonstration work, a popular program will be put on each evening which will not only be instructive but entertaining. The English and music departments of Eureka College will furnish the program for one evening, which will consist of the presentation of Christmas carols in acting and song.

University of Chicago Notes

Shortly after the beginning of the autumn quarter, the Disciple students attending the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, together with the faculty of the Disciples Divinity House, organized themselves into the "Disciples Club" of the University. C. G. Baker was elected president and W. E. Carrol secretary. Twenty-nine members have been enrolled. The first banquet was held in Lexington Hall Thursday evening, Nov. 19, at which nearly all the members were in attendance. It was a get-acquainted meeting. Each one present told from whence they came, their college, the department in which they were doing their work in the university, the degree they were working for and when they expected to receive it.

The increase in the number of Disciple students attending the Divinity School this year is very marked. Our colleges are well represented in the list. There are at present 23 Disciples in attendance. Of this number there are 8 from Drake, 6 from Hiram, 4 from Butler, 2 from Transylvania, 1 from Bethany, 1 from Eureka and 1 from the State University of Missouri.

Four of our men will this year take the Ph. D. degree in the department of philosophy, three will take the D. B. degree and six the A. M. degree. Three of the number are returned missionaries and one is preparing to go to the foreign field next fall. Three are taking work in the sociology department, two are preparing to teach the Old Testament, two the New Testament and nine are preparing to enter the ministry.

The club appointed Charles O. Lee, 12029 Stewart Ave., Chicago, as chairman of the pulpit supply committee and it will be his work to introduce those students who have no preaching points yet this year to churches where the services of student preachers are desired.

New York City Missions

The Disciples' Missionary Union of Greater New York reports the work of the four missions under its charge as being in the best condition in the history of the work.

During the month of October there were nine additions. The three English missions have made great gains, especially in their Bible school work.

The work among the Russians is most interesting, and has been very active this year. On each Lord's day there are the morning and evening services and a Bible class for men. There are classes in English for men Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Fridays with paid teachers. The advancement of the men in the classes is wonderful. A class is being organized for Russian women, meeting twice a week. On Wednesday night there is prayer meeting, and on Saturday nights a singing class, followed by some special feature in the way of an address, lecture or entertainment. The attendance crowds the rooms. This work is all done in the rented basement of another church.

The Baptists this last year contributed $73,184.00 for mission work in Manhattan and Bronx alone. The Disciples of Christ this year in all five boroughs and Greater New York is spending $5,400.00, of which $1,800.00 must be contributed by the churches in New York City itself. In other words, our entire brotherhood, outside of New York City, is contributing $3,600.00 for mission work, in this, the greatest city in America.

The need for the future is for a suitable building on the lower East Side to house the foreign work. The Russian work is only one of many that can be done. There is a call from a group of 40 or 50 Slovaks, who are a New Testament people in faith and practice. A suitable building would become an institutional headquarters, in the midst of the various foreign population of the lower East Side.

The growth of the city is tremendous, and is towards the suburbs and more open districts. Sunday-schools planted there now would become strong, self-supporting churches in ten years or less, duplicating the successful work of the East Orange and Flatbush churches. The self-supporting churches of Greater New York are carrying more than their share of the load. Their men are giving not only their money but their time and talents.

M. M. AMMUNSON.

Chairman Mission Committee, Disciples' Missionary Union.

News from the Foreign Society

This is the fortieth year of the history of the Foreign Society. Not very many now living that can recall the historic event of the organization of the society in the basement of the old Fourth and Walnut Street Church, Louisville, Kentucky, October 21, 1875. About all that survive were present at the Atlanta Convention, October 7-14. We recall W. T. Moore, J. H. Garrison, W. S. Dickinson, A. McLean, F. M. Rains. There may have been others. Since 1875 the Disciples have raised $5,738,196 through the Foreign Society, and sent 351 missionaries far hence to the mission fields.

The society has had but three presidents during the thirty-nine years: Isaac Errett, C. L. Loos and A. McLean. A. McLean has been in its service about thirty-two years, the senior secretary for nearly twenty-two years, and the junior secretary about ten years. W. S. Dickinson, the first treasurer, has been a member of the executive committee during all the thirty-nine years.

Education has been one of the chief factors in the development of the society. By addresses, lectures, rallies and conferences it has taught the colleges and churches and Sunday-schools the great lessons of Christian missions. The officers of the society, especially qualified pastors, returned missionaries have gone hither and yon teaching the lessons of world-wide missions. Tracts have been written and scattered broadcast. Articles and editorials have been prepared for our church papers. Many valuable missionary books have also been written by the president of the society and the missionaries. No less than twenty-one volumes have been written and given to the public. Some of these have enjoyed a large sale, and some of these are among the very best missionary books published.

The society has not been lacking in enterprise. It has been alert to adopt the best and sanest methods to awaken interest in the churches. Twenty years ago it first adopted the apportionment plan. For a time this advance step involved some criticism. Now it is a generally recognized method. This society wrote its first annuity bond November 27, 1897. The Foreign Society also had the great pleasure of appointing the first living-link missionary in the brotherhood in 1893. How this step has helped all our missionary work! The first missionary rally to instruct and inspire and awaken the churches was conducted by its agents. The programs for the national conventions have uniformly been unique and inspiring.

WHY USE THE GRADED LESSONS?

Because they present Scriptural and moral truths in such form that they can be understood by those who are to receive them. Children are in their very nature GRADED; therefore the instruction given them must be graded according to their varying powers to receive. A teacher would not last long in the public schools who would ask first graders to master the works of Plato. Neither should a system of Bible lesson study continue that offers to Primary pupils such difficult problems as are presented in the books of Leviticus, Isaiah and Romans. It is a principle as old as modern education that knowledge should be ADAPTED TO THE PUPIL. Shall Religious Education alone be exempted from observing this fundamental principle?

THE CO-OPERATION COMMITTEE.

A mass meeting of friends of The Christian Century held in First Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga., Oct. 10, 1914, appointed a committee of six, whose names are appended below, to devise and, as far as possible, carry out plans for the adequate financing of The Christian Century and the Disciples Publication Society. It is now well understood that this Society is a religious corporation, having no capital stock, no private investment and no personal profits. Membership in the Society is issued to churches and Sunday-schools that patronize it, and to individuals who make gifts to its support. Details as to membership will be sent upon application to the office of the Society. The committee is now seeking to secure funds with which to sustain the Society during the next five years while it works out the problem of self-support. We believe this to be one of the most urgent and significant causes now making its appeal to the Disciples of Christ. It is high time that a religious journal representing the finest ideals of our Disciples' history and a publication enterprise entirely freed from the commercial spirit and consecrated to the task of creating a worthy literature to represent and instruct our people should be established by the gifts of those who cherish such ideals. To this end we have asked the editor of The Christian Century and have obtained his consent to set apart this page for the use of the Committee in interpreting its work and in calling upon those of like mind everywhere to make gifts. This page, therefore, is entirely outside of editorial jurisdiction during the period in which the Committee undertakes to carry out the grateful task laid upon it by the Atlanta mass meeting.

The Co-operation Committee feels that the most timely message it can send to the friends of The Christian Century this week is to suggest that they send The Christian Century for one year as a Christmas gift to a number of their friends. The Publishers have agreed to make a special rate of $1 per year for such gift subscriptions, provided three or more names are sent in accompanied by cash remittance.

The Imitation of the Spiritual

INSTEAD OF CONSTRUCTING A SPIRITUAL LIFE IN HARMONY WITH THEIR OWN DISTINCTIVE PRINCIPLES THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST ARE MAKING THE MISTAKE OF IMITATIVELY TAKING ON THE CONVENTIONAL KIND OF SPIRITUAL LIFE FOUND IN THE CHRISTIAN DENOMINATIONS.

There is a very appreciable hunger among the Disciples for a deeper and more satisfying spiritual experience.

We share with the rest of Christendom in the modern revival of the spiritual, but we feel, besides, a distinctive need of our own.

Historically, we Disciples have put our mission as a people into this nutshell: the restoration of the primitive creed, the primitive ordinances and the primitive life. Our characteristic discussion of this epitome of our purposes has always concerned itself at great length with the first two items, while the third item was dismissed with a sentence or two to the effect that everyone knew what the primitive Christian life was anyhow, and no time need be taken to discuss it.

It cannot be denied that in the matter of the creed of the Church the Disciples have made a distinct contribution to the Christian world. In the matter of the ordinances we have made a similar contribution by our conception and practice of the Lord's Supper and by our conception of the design of baptism, although it must always be remembered that our mode of practicing baptism was championed by Baptists before the Disciples appeared on the scene.

But in the matter of the Christian life we Disciples have not only made no distinctive contribution but have been quite unaware that it lay within the range of our possibilities to do so.

Awaking in these latter days to a sense of lacking an adequate inward spiritual experience, our impulses have drawn us toward the adoption of the traditional type of spiritual experience which obtains in the various Christian bodies around us.

The Disciples are today found sitting at the feet of Methodists and Presbyterians and Congregationalists and Baptists and Episcopalians to receive from them inspiration and guidance in the things of Christian piety.

That this humble attitude in our relation to these noble Christian groups is a justly deserved tribute to the superiority of their Christian experience over our own they would probably be as prompt to disallow as we Disciples are frank enough to assert.

But the fact remains that the preachers among Disciples who are sounding what is called "the spiritual note," and who thereby are gaining an affectionate and grateful following, are sounding a note which, by their own testimony, they have caught from preachers and spiritual teachers of the Christian denominations.

The Disciples have produced no independent literature on the spiritual life. A few books—not so many as a half dozen—have been written, but these are imitative, reflecting the traditional type, and lacking any constructive method or insight.

The writings of Andrew Murray, J. R. Miller, G. A. J. Ross, Dr. Jowett, G. Campbell Morgan and the list of spiritual teachers whose names are annually in evidence on the programs of the Keswick Conference in England and the Winona and Northfield Conferences in America, together with the autobiographies of missionaries like Henry Martyn,—the writings of such men are, aside from the Scriptures, the inspiration of whatever interpretation of the inner life finds its way into Disciple preaching.

But the modern Disciple mind, while it feeds gratefully on this spiritual bounty, is, nevertheless, left consciously unsatisfied by it. We feel that it lacks substance, thickness and a certain fullness of reality. It seems to be better fitted for some temperaments than for others, and its effect is often to put one out of sympathetic touch with the two greatest spiritual movements of the age, scientific scholarship and the organization of social justice.

A sympathetic and understanding observer, watchng the attempt of the Disciples to take over into their inner life a type of Christian experience to which they are not accustomed and for which their characteristic thought-habits have not prepared them, easily detects the awkwardness and strain with which they go about it.

At conventions, for example, such an observer gains the impression that the "devotional periods" are more or less of an importation, more or less artificially arranged, and carried through with an unction which, while perfectly sincere and deeply in earnest, is nevertheless strained and wrought up.

The attitude assumed in such periods might be expressed in consciousness by this resolution: Go to, now let us be spiritual!

Again and again the leaders of such devotions have been heard using words with practically that meaning. In quieting the disorder in the room the leader often pleads: We are trying to have a spiritual meeting! By which expression is disclosed the fact that the spiritual is conceived as something that stands over against the main business in hand, and is an experience—probably an emotional experience—that is to be induced by the artificial stimuli about to be provided.

(In candor it must be stated that the early morning prayer hours during our conventions seem to be of a different character, more nearly illustrating a type of spiritual experience indigenous to the Disciple mind.)

True spiritual life is not strained after. It cannot be induced by an external situation. It springs up naturally within the soul. It cannot be affected, nor imitated. It is a delusion if it is second-hand. And it is better to have a spiritual life that is truly one's own, even though it lack certain features possessed and prized by others, than to strain after a type of spiritual life which one has no right in spiritual honesty to possess.

Words like these in this editorial would be open to the charge of ungraciousness were it not for the fact that the writer of them holds that the Disciples, though historically neglectful of the culture of the inner life and today, consequently, less abounding in the riches of the soul than are the Christian bodies around them, do have, nevertheless, certain great distinctive structural principles, by which they may, if they will, build up an inner life which will include the virtues possessed by the conventional type and add thereto a unique character of their own.

The Kaiser at Church

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT.

Of all the dispatches coming from the front in these days of scant news of the European war we regard those of Mr. James O'Donnell Bennett, representative of the Chicago Tribune, as pre-eminently the most vibrant with human interest. By his reporter's initiative and the prestige of his paper as well as by the help of ordinary good luck, Mr. Bennett has been able to get to the center of some highly interesting situations. His presence at the Great Headquarters of the German army brought him the extraordinary opportunity of observing the Kaiser under circumstances of peculiar fascination. That this opportunity was made full and brilliant use of will be the verdict of every reader of the following vivid paragraphs.

THIS morning the emperor went to church, coming by motor car from the villa in this town where he has been in residence for several days. At church I sat fifteen feet from him and watched him as sharply as decency would permit. I took no notes, but during such parts of the sermon as I could not understand I went over the details of the scene and of the bearing of the principal figure in it and etched them on my memory.

I write while the impression is still fresh.

This, thought I, as the emperor seated himself in a drawing room chair before the improvised altar, is the saddest face I have seen in my life. Not the saddest either, nor yet the most careworn, but the gravest. In that countenance was no woe, but a solemnity so profound and austere that it moved the heart not to sympathy so much as to a kind of awe.

LOOKS LIKE WARRIOR-KING.

I think that I may say that this man looked his part in the present tremendous drama. He looked not only the warrior-king but the anxious head of the state, and you said to yourself, as you studied the reflective eyes and the motionless lips, "The burden of empire is upon him." For seconds upon seconds it was like a face of marble—undisturbed by so much as the quiver of an eyelid or the parting of the lips.

The eyes held me with a peculiar fascination, and when, as the emperor turned a little to the right, I had an opportunity to look almost full into his face, the conviction of the sadness of the face would come over me again, and I was minded of the expression you catch in certain portraits of Lincoln—the reflective, far-off look—as if the brain behind the eyes were busy with mournful things not yet borne in on other men.

This expression of a something in the emperor's countenance that was more poignant and more human than solemnity and that still was not quite equivalent to sadness was the dominant impression of what was to me a very interesting hour.

And so, my first impression of the German emperor was the impression of profound gravity. That expression of his made him seem an older man than I had expected to find him. He looked every one of his 55 years, and more than looked them.

NOT A YOUNG MAN.

We, of America, I am sure, always think of him as a young man, hardly realizing that he has been twenty-six years on the throne and that he is a grandfather.

And yet, half an hour after service, he seemed young again and there were moments when there was a look of almost boyish happiness in his eyes. He was standing then by the roadside after the ceremony of "parademarsch," when 2,000 of the landsturm had passed in review before him. A glittering staff was grouped around him. Old men and young bent very low over his hand, but always he deftly turned their greeting from what

Kaiser William IV of Germany Who, Mr. Bennett asserts, has "the saddest face I have ever seen."

I supposed was going to be a kissing of the hand into a handshake.

He spoke with animation and it seemed to me that he must be speaking of pleasant matters. With at least four of the officers he laughed a great deal, showing his white teeth as he did so. He laughed with his shoulders, too, the way a stout man laughs, though the emperor is not stout, and once he laughed so heartily, but not loudly, that his cheeks became for an instant quite rosy.

All the time that he was talking the eyes, which at service had seemed so sad, were twinkling with merriment. He spoke rapidly and sometimes with alert nods.

Throughout that fifteen or twenty minutes of visiting by the roadside he seemed a thoroughly likable man. His smile is infectious and I thought that once he saw me grinning blandly at him and there seemed to be the flicker of a grin in response. Or perhaps it was my queer semi-civilian, semi-military correspondent's uniform that arrested one of his swift glances around, for it is a garment that, with me in it, is calculated to make any man grin.

THE PREACHER.

The preacher walked back and forth in front of the altar during the half hour before the emperor's arrival. He was Pastor Goerns, one of the court chaplains. His countenance was mild, but he had the voice of a warrior. He wore a black cassock and over it a gray military cloak. His cap, although it was simple, somehow recalled by its form the more ornate headdress of the Biblical priesthood. Its color was black. At his breast hung a large silver cross. He was a cheerful cleric, and he beamed with an equal eye upon the officers young and old, saluting them with the military salute as they took their places.

And so we waited, the hall not buzzing but only sibilant with the subdued conversation of the princes, and dukes, and generals, and other officers.

A hush again enveloped the brilliant scene.

At last the big moment came.

There were hoarse shouts outside and a buzz of autos. Then silence for an instant, followed by the tramp of many feet, not heavy but firm. That sound suddenly ceased.

At this instant there was absolute silence in the congregation and everybody was standing with his right hand at salute.

The trumpeter stepped down from the musicians' platform and took the pastor's military cloak from his shoulders.

THE KAISER ARRIVES.

We heard the steps of a man walking slowly. Leaving the plank walk and mounting the center platform, or dais, he removed his helmet and when he did that everybody on that platform and the platform each side of him uncovered.

He advanced to the drawing-room chair and stood before it, while the pastor, who was smiling, came forward from the altar and shook his hand. The pastor made no obeisance when he did this. It was just an informal greeting as between man and man.

We on the other platforms stood until the emperor seated himself in the drawing-room chair. Throughout the service when he stood, we stood, and when he sat we sat. He wore the uniform of a general of the German army. It was of the familiar bluish-gray cloth, with a red collar embroidered in gold.

His helmet was covered like the others, with greenish linen cloth. He carried a sword and wore spurs, and a military cloak which he did not remove.

One of my first thoughts was that I had never seen a notable who looked so much like the busts of himself; that is, as to the contour of the face, and yet I was surprised to see the double chin so pronounced. When the emperor bent his head the chin gave the lower part of his face almost a chubby look—almost juvenile.

NO SIGN OF RESTLESSNESS.

In his bearing I tried to detect the signs of the alleged restlessness of which the world has made so much, but it was not there. Save to rise for the prayers and the hymns, he almost never moved. His sad, intent eyes very seldom shifted from their straight-ahead gaze.

The emperor joined in the hymns with gusto, often not looking at the words in the book. During the prayers he stood with his eyes closed and his head a little bowed. Then his attitude was one of austere devotion, and, observing the firm set of the jaw and the suggestion of intense concentration in his attitude, you would say, "Here is a very pious man."

During the sermon I tried to detect in his expression either condescension or complacence, either pride or arrogance. But I could not penetrate the mask of gravity. He seemed to me an epitome of composure, touched at times with melancholy abstraction.

If I tried to make more out of what I saw I should only be dabbling in the spectacular, with no truthful impression in it. If you said, "A careworn looking man very intent upon his devotions," I suppose you would be saying what you would have said had the German emperor been a private citizen.

SERVICE SIMPLE ONE.

The service was very simple, including as it did three or four sentences of invocation from the Evangelical prayer-book, two or three prayers, also from the book, the Apostle's creed, a half hour sermon, and two hymns. Service opened with the reading by the pastor of that sentence which in the Protestant Episcopal prayer-book begins something like, "Lord God, who hath made heaven and earth and in whom alone is our help," and it was followed by other sentences of invocation. Then came the Apostles' creed, and after it prayers—all read in a loud voice by the pastor, who at the conclusion of each prayer discharged an "amen" as if he were shouting "Salver" ("volley") to a German battery.

The first hymn, which was sung very early in the service, was an adaptation of the ancient "Hymn of Praise of St. Ambrosius." A German captain told me it would be about the equivalent of what English-spaking Protestants call the "Te Deum." The pastor announced it with homely words of which I have so often heard the translation in American Evangelical churches, "Let us join in singing" hymn number so and so—"the first, the second, and the third stanzas."

I give here the captain's and my attempt at a translation:

Lift to thee their hymn of praise;
Great God we praise thee!
Lord, we glorify thy power!
Before thee earth bows down
And marvels at thy works.
As thou wert in ancient times
So art thou evermore.

All that can glorify thee,
Cherubim and seraphim,
Lift to thee their hymn of praise;
All angels serving thee
Call on thee in blessed peace,
Call thee holy, holy, holy!

Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth,
Holy Lord of the war armies!
Strong help in need!
Earth and air and sea,
Are filled with thy glory.
All is thine.

These words were sung to a noble air, and the voice of the brasses produced a prodigious effect.

The Scripture reading for the day had been taken from one of the letters of Paul, and on certain martial phrases in that letter the sermon was founded. In the course of his remarks the pastor paid his respects to Paul as a fellow warrior. "Paulus," he said, "who was a good soldier, too—not with the sword but with the tongue."

It was a war sermon, vehement, valiant, intimate, a sermon by a soldier for soldiers, and it put fight into a man. It said, with many hammerings and many short, sharp sentneces, "Fight the good fight and trust in the Great Captain who is God above. If he is with us who can stand against us?"

The preacher spoke of "that most beautiful word in the German language, the word 'vertrauen'" [to trust], and in that word was the essence of his sermon. The motto of the German people, "Gott mit uns," was, he felt, a kind of echo of that word and gave the keynote of Germany's spiritual life.

"There are two things," he said, "for the German soldier to remember. The first is his trust in God, for that is his shield; the second is his trust in himself, for that is his sword. "With these two we soldiers must win.

"Beloved, I have seen the soldiers under all conditions and I have never heard the voice of complaint among them. Never for one moment have they forgotten or lost their trust in self.

"The wounded did not complain, but only begged that they might soon be well again so that they could return to the front. The young men going into battle believed in their cause and they won. I have never seen a soldier who did not believe in the cause and in himself.

"But, beloved comrades, is that enough? Nay! For in that hardest of all tests for an army, a retreat, the soldier must have not only his trust in himself but his trust in God. 'God still is with us,' he must say, 'and in God's good time we shall win.'

"We shall be victorious because we will it, and we will it because with God's help we can do the task he has set us to do."

SAYS GOD ASKED PEOPLE'S HELP.

With these words the pastor closed and with them he made the vast building ring:

"When war came upon the land God said to Germany. 'Am I to be with thee in this thy task? Wilt thou make this struggle with me or without me?'

"And the voice of a united people bore to the Great Captain's ear the words 'With thee, O Father, with thee, in this our heavy task!'"

All the preacher said was summed up in the hymn which the 2,000 sang after the sermon. It was the ancient "Niederlandisches Dankgebet," or "Dutch Prayer of Thanksgiving." It was sung to a tune that made its short, strong words move as to the roll of a hundred drums—not the roll of drums, either, but the abrupt beating of drums.

The effect of percussion, in other words, with which the 2,000 came down on the incessantly recurring rhythms of such words as "treten" and "beten," "waltet" and "hailtet," "Schlechten" and 'Knechten," "Streite" and "Seite," "wollte" and "sollte," "begonnen" and "gewonnen," "loben" and "oben," "Gemeinde" and "Feinde" was beyond description in its vigor and precision.

KAISER LEADS SINGING.

It was, both literally and in the musical usage of the words, an "attack," especially after the emperor took personal charge of this portion of the exercises.

The adjutant general at the little organ gave the note to the singers, the resplendent trumpeter and his men took it up, and the hall rang with the march of the music and the hammering of the short words—only five three-syllable words in the total of ninety-seven.

And here I make the perilous experiment of attempting a translation of the German. On account of my deficiencies in the language the translation is both halting and free—halting in its expression of the melody of the original and free in its rendering of the original spirit. But it is the best I can do.

To God on high we lift our prayer.
His judgments ever righteous are.
And His strong arm the good sustains:
O praise Him who forgets us not!

With us He stands in our hard fight.
And with the right His triumphs are.
Thy battles begun we know they are won
Thy warriors we, but the victory Thine.

To Thee on high our praises rise,
Thou Captain of our host:
Be with us now and evermore,
O cast us not away!
Thy name we worship, Lord our God,
And pray, Thou make us free!

KAISER CALLS MORE FIRE.

Valiantly as the eight landsmen from the cavalry regiments blew on their instruments of brass they did not blow hard enough to suit the emperor and at each of what I will call the drum words in the first stanza—"treten" and "Beten," "waltet," and "haltet" and "Schlechten" and "Knechten"—he vehemently beat time with his right hand.

He wanted more fire from brasses and the singers and in the second and third stanzas he got it.

The singing rose to a spirited finale and then came the benediction, followed by an instant of silent prayer. When the hush was broken the pastor advanced to the altar and the emperor again shook hands with him.

After the emperor had shaken hands with the pastor he turned around and faced the throng that extended from his dais to the entrance of the hall. Just as he stepped down from the dais he saluted and said:

"GUTEN MORGEN, HAMARADEN."

And the two thousand, in a shout that went crashing up to the iron girders, responded with one voice:

"GUTEN MORGEN, MAJESTAT!"

To me that was the most stirring incident of the day. It was so unanimous. It was a yell of comradeship. It sent a thrill up the spine.

THE KAISER DEPARTS.

Then all of us on the other platforms slowly followed the emperor out of the hall. The troops came later. When we had got back into the main roadway that runs by the new barracks we found the emperor standing a little apart from his staff at the right side of the road.

On the roofs of two of the new buildings were stationed three or four sentries, and they could overlook the whole scene. Behind garden walls in the rear of the emperor other soldiers were standing, but they unobtrusively vanished from the picture when, apparently, it was grouped to their satisfaction.

All the officers who were waiting for "Parademarsch" to begin visited in low tones and I think everybody felt quite as solemn as he had felt at church service.

Finally piercing commands began to snarl along the road and you heard the tramp of many feet. The words "in gruppenkolonne, vier neheneinander" came through the crisp autumn air like darts.

That, I think, means "In close order, four abreast," and, granting I have the words right, which I probably haven't, they were followed in a few seconds by "Augen rechts! Parademarsch," for which we would say, "Eyes right! Goose step."

At that command each company of the 2,000 landsturm who had been at church flung itself into the goose step, perhaps a hundred feet before reaching the emperor, and kept it up a good bit after passing him.

The faces of the men, all oldsters, were tense with pride and excitement. I suppose it was the first time in their lives most of them had had so close a view of their sovereign. They looked like men from the farms, honest, simple faces, and I could picture them telling to their grandchildren in years to come the story of this morning's church going.

"Three Men in a Boat"

Dignified Foreign Missionary Commissioners Come to Grief in the China Sea.

BY STEPHEN J. COREY.

IT WOULD be difficult to crowd into twenty-four hours more varied experiences of travel than we have just had in that time. Because of the continued downpour of rain we were unable to proceed to this place overland, so yesterday evening we embarked in a tobacco steamer from San Fernando, a small flat-bottom boat of 1,500 tons. It plies between Manila and Aparri on the northeast part of the Island of Luzon, and has a bad reputation as to the comfort of its passengers. It was but lightly loaded, and this, added to the fact that we sailed but thirty hours after a typhoon had passed leaving a very rough sea, made our journey most miserable.

SEASICKNESS.

Other people who have sailed the seas may have been just as seasick as we were, but it is doubtful if anyone ever experienced more different kinds of seasickness than we did. In the first place the smell of the ship gave us a certain kind of nausea, and then the greasy, garlicky ship's food that we were foolish enough to try to eat before she sailed, gave us another kind. After sailing we were conscious of a peculiar sensation of "mal de mere" caused by the fact that our cabins were in the stern and we received the full benefit of the bucking-broncho kind of pitching of which the ship has a way all its own. But this was not all. We were directly over the propeller, which, because of the roughness of the sea, seemed to be out of the water fully half the time. Every time the stern rose up the propeller spun with greatly accelerated speed which made the boat vibrate like a dog shaking himself after a ducking. It is simply impossible to describe or even diagram the extraordinary feeling that possessed one when this occurred. Then, last, but not least, the cabins were too stifling to be endurable, so the men in our party persuaded the cabin boys to bring our bedding to the upper deck and place us on cots that we might have the benefit of the air.

HOLDING ON.

In the night the sea became so rough that our cots began to glide across the deck, and we placed Professor Bower in the center where he could hold on to an iron post and anchor us by allowing us to hold to his cot. After a time Mr. Doan and his son wisely went below, choosing the stifling state rooms rather than the rollicking deck. Along toward morning the wind blew the blanket off Professor Bower and in an unguarded moment he released his hold on the post and rose to rescue it. Just as he loosened his hold on the post the ship tilted radically to port, and I and my cot shot across the deck with lightning-like rapidity. The force of my flight was slightly slackened by the fact that my cot crashed into half a dozen rattan deck chairs that had preceded me toward the railing. Before I could recover myself, Professor Bower, who had wildly followed me across the deck with involuntary speed and much less dignity than he usually has at his command, landed upon my stomach with his 200 pounds, and before any apologies were forthcoming the ship had tilted violently to starboard, and both of us, piled on top of my cot, were gliding at top speed in the opposite direction. In the middle of the deck we encountered the iron post with Professor Bower acting as cushion of contact. By some marvelous providence he escaped serious injury and abandoning himself to the instinct of self-preservation threw his arms about the post and clung for dear life. I myself felt strangely drawn to the Professor and gripped him in a fond embrace. By this united action we stopped the mad game of ping-pong we had begun to play and had time to lie on our backs, gripping with our hands our improvised anchor, and with our minds trying to analyze an entirely new sensation of seasickness.

CHINA SEA FAMOUS.

Some people have seasickness when a ship pitches—that is, when it teeters endwise on the swells or seas. Other people find themselves especially susceptible to the motions of a ship when it rolls from side to side. The China Sea is famous for its ability to make a ship go both ways at the same time, and very few people can withstand the combination. Add to this peculiar conceit of this famous sea, the weak resistance of a small, half-loaded, flat-bottomed tobacco boat, and you have a combination of surprising motions which brings the proudest spirit to grief. The nearest description of this motion that one can think of is an accelerated wallow, and the approximate feeling that one has concerning his own anatomy during this motion is that his whole body is swinging in three directions at once, while his stomach is revolving entirely on a separate axis of its own.

DROPPED ANCHOR.

After a little short of twelve hours of this sort of thing it was announced that we had reached the harbor of Salamagus. The ship dropped anchor far out in the bay, and as the sea was running very high even here, our hasty toilet was made with lingering misgivings, and we made ready our baggage for unloading with faltering steps and pale expressionless faces. The natives had come out with crude, home-made boats which they kept alongside with difficulty, and we were let down into them for passage ashore. The only thing that kept us from fear of never getting safely ashore through the wildly tossing sea was the fact that we were so miserable that any possibility was looked upon with indifference. The men in these strange, frail looking boats were really skillful in the handling of their craft, and got us ashore without any real difficulty.

We landed at a little village composed of half a dozen bamboo houses and a warehouse built of the same material. Here we found one of our Filipino evangelists who had ridden fifteen miles from his station to meet us and guide us on our way. He informed us that the heavy rains had destroyed portions of the road and that we would have to make the thirty-five miles by ox-cart and buggy instead of automobile. He had five of these oxen and little covered carts ready for us, and we soon departed after reading a telegram from Mr. Hanna of Vigan, who wired us that he would meet us half way on our journey.

MORE EXPERIENCES.

The little carts, or cortonas, as the natives call them, are made entirely of bamboo, save the wheels, and the cover resembles very much a huge poke bonnet. You sit cramped up inside on the bamboo slat-bottom and bump along without any springs under you, while the driver sits on the front end of the box, almost astride his ox and gets an indifferent speed out of it with a sharp stick. We had a downpour of rain about every half hour, and our cart drivers kept most of the rain out of the open front of our carts and also from their own shoulders by throwing about them their stiff, outstanding capes made of palm leaves. The road is a good one, kept up by the government, and we got along easily across the small streams until we reached one of the larger rivers where Mr. Hanna was awaiting us with a two-pony buggy and a covered spring cart pulled by three very diminutive ponies. Here we dismissed all of the ox-carts save one, which was reserved for our hand baggage and Dr. Lemmon, who volunteered to follow us in a slower way.

We did not proceed, however, until we had stopped for dinner, very kindly prepared for us by a Filipino gateman and his wife, important people in their village. The good man escorted us upstairs to their living apartments; for a Filipino never lives on the first floor of his house. Although this was the best house in the town, a flock of sheep was occupying the ground floor. These good people set before us boiled rice, fried eggs, canned sardines and fresh rainwater for drinking. We had been able to take no breakfast, and this, together with our long cart journey, had put a keen edge to our appetites and we gave an exceedingly good account of ourselves, much to the satisfaction of our host and hostess.

REACHING VIGAN.

When we came to our first river we found it a raging torrent, although in the dry season it is but a small insignificant stream. The government has built a large concrete bridge here, but the rains came on before one of the abutments could be finished, and it was useless for crossing with vehicles. We crossed the bridge on foot, climbing down from the unfinished abutment on a long bamboo ladder, the lower end of which rested in a bamboo cart to which was hitched a water buffalo or caribou. The wheels were removed from our vehicles by villagers who volunteered to help and then the buggy and the cart carried across by about a dozen of them who held their burdens above their heads and waded armpit-deep through the rushing water. The little ponies partly waded and partly swam across. We crossed the next river by having thirteen nearly naked natives around each vehicle, who pulled and pushed and yelled and struggled until we gained the other shore. Just before reaching Vigan we came to the largest stream across which we were taken on a bamboo raft. The raft was pushed up to the shore, our vehicles driven on to it and then we were poled across by the native raftsman.

Thus after about eight hours of varied overland and water experiences we reached Vigan. It was a hard day's work, but we ought not complain, for our missionaries are subject to such journeys many times during the year.

The Voice from Behind

Funeral Sermon—Published Because of its Beautiful Appreciation of a Beautiful Life.

BY E. M. WAITS.

WE are listening today to this voice from behind, sweeter than martial music to the ear of the patriot, more compelling than the mighty masters of song, the pealing organ or full-voiced choir. It was a voice containing the passion of a great soul sustained in its weakness by a power omnipotent. During her lifetime, bodily weakness was her continual portion, but this was borne with such fortitude that, like Paul, she could say, "Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my weakness that the power of God may rest on me, for when I am weak, then I am strong." Tested ofttimes in the fiery furnace of trial, familiar with Gethsemane with its tears and anguish, she withstood all without a murmur, nor did she ever impeach the wisdom of the Father. Her faith never suffered even a partial eclipse.

She had the humility of a devout faith in God's word and his promises. She believed that the Bible was truly inspired of God and that it was able to make us wise unto salvation, that it was profitable for doctrine, reproof and correction and instruction in righteousness; that it was able to make us complete, thoroughly furnished unto every good work. To improve the means and agencies through which it might be taught was the passion of her later years. Not long since, I received a letter from her containing this epigram: "Now abideth the lesson, the pupil and the teacher, but the greatest of these is the teacher." When the wave of teacher training swept over the country a few years ago, she was on the crest of the wave. For more than four years, she has been the head of the Educational Department of the inter-denominational Sunday-school work in Texas. When the new idea of Religious Education came, she was one of its greatest advocates and exponents. She was the leading spirit in the organization of our City Training School and served as its dean until the hour of her death. She was familiar with every new step taken in Sunday-school work, whether in Dakota, Kansas or Gary, Ind. She had vision, inspiration and knowledge and knew full well how to impart all to her fellow-workers.

We pass over a quarter of a century of most active life, years filled with unselfish service as teacher in the public schools of our city and as the first state secretary of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions: a time full of tender ministry caring for orphans and educating young men for the ministry out of her slender resources. No human word could add to the quiet beauty and dignity of Mrs. Walden's consecrated life. In quietness and confidence, she found her strength. She was the only person I have ever known over whose head I could consistently paint a halo. She was truly a realization of that brave spirit of Browning:

Rev. E. M. Waits, pastor at Magnolia Avenue church, Fort Worth, Texas.

"One who never turned her back but marched forward,
Never doubted clouds would break.
Never dreamed, though right were worsted wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better
Sleep to wake."

THE MESSAGE OF HER LIFE, A CALL TO SERVICE.

Specifically, her life speaks forth:

I.

The power of a surrendered life. It remains to be seen what a thoroughly consecrated life can do. In Mrs. Walden's life, we see what a life more thoroughly unselfish than we have ever known can do. The heart cry of every man and woman who has been lifted out of self into Christ is that of George Matheson:

"O love that will not let me go,
I rest my weary soul on thee.
I give thee back the life I owe.
That in thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be."

Michael Angelo, working on his immortal statue of David, put a lighted candle in the visor of his cap, that no shadow of himself might fall on his work. In seven years of fellowship with her in service, I have never known her to allow a shadow of self to fall across her work.

II.

The power of the sacrificial life. Her favorite Bible verse was "I fill up on my part that which was lacking of the afflictions of Christ in my own flesh for his body's sake, which is the Church." The cross, with too many of us, is a figure of speech, an ornament for a necklace or a watchfob. She believed that the bleeding heart of Calvary should have its response in the aching heart in Fort Worth.

III.

The way of the loving heart. There was a strain of elusive mysticism about her whole spiritual nature. No one could associate with her without learning the pathway of the loving heart. She had a mantle of charity as broad as the weaknesses of humanity. If any one had tried and failed, or if there was one like Peter, following afar off, she was ever ready to forgive and forget for she truly believed with Faber:

"That the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind:
But we make His love too narrow
By false limits of our own,
And magnify His strictness
With a zeal He will not own."

IV.

The courage of an unconquerable faith and hope. The soul that has an unconquerable faith and aspiration cares little for difficulties and flings bold defiance at hindering circumstances. This spirit of God within her heart was constantly overcoming difficulties and upreaching after better things. A few days ago I quoted those startling lines of Henley:

"Out of the darkness that covers me
Black as the pit from pole to pole,
I thank whatever gods may be
For my unconquerable soul.

In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not winced or cried aloud:
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody but unbowed.

It matters not how strait the gate
How charged with punishment the scroll,
I am the master of my fate,
I am the captain of my soul."

"This, she said, is a true expression of my life." The one unconquerable element in human life is goodness and this she possessed in a remarkable degree.

V.

Firm reliance upon God's word and the life of prayer. Under a very recent date, she writes, "I could never have lived without this precious word. How often it has been my strength and support, it grows more wonderful to me every day I live." I have never known any one to rely more implicitly on God's promises in prayer, and whatever progress our Church has made, it owes more to her prayer tower on Fifth street than on any message from this pulpit. She believed "that the procession of our life, however sad or disturbed, is ordered by a Being of infinite benevolence and power: whose everlast-

"And though the Lord give you the bread of adversity and the water of affliction, yet shall not thy teachers be hidden away any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers; and thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying 'This is the way, walk ye in it.'" Isaiah 30: 20-21.

MINISTERS' SALARIES, PENSIONS AND RELIEF.

FIRE insurance is practically universal and life insurance is rapidly becoming so. The cost of the former is one of the fixed overhead charges of every business. The cost of the latter is reckoned among the necessary items in every prudent man's cost of living. Salaries are adjusted to include this outlay as regularly as food and clothing.

Of all salaried men the minister finds life insurance most imperative.

At 40 years of age a policy of $6,000 in the Presbyterian Ministers' Fund for Life Insurance, which on its 150th anniversary was opened to all Protestant ministers, and is unquestionably the best for them, costs $170.70 a year. For the great majority this is prohibitive. And yet, if the widow were able to secure six per cent net, it would yield only $360 per year. And nothing but the minister's death will bring that.

Blindness, paralysis, tuberculosis, disabling rheumatism or old age, which comes early to the minister, would not only bring no help from the life insurance, but would also leave its premiums to be met as before. In such a case it is a burden rather than a help.

Just here the last year's report of the Disciples Board of Ministerial Relief is suggestive. Every case of worthy need, among ministers or missionaries, which was reported to it, was met with a pension. In one instance it was $435, to a man who is still living and paying part of this amount for life insurance. In many instances it was $300 to $360 per year—the equivalent of $5,000 or $6,000, though in most of these cases death had not intervened and an insurance would not have been available. On an average the pension was $190, the variation being according to the circumstances of each household.

We understand that the Board of Ministerial Relief is trying to work out a basis for guaranteeing a certain pension for a certain annual payment. It will be an interesting development.

But meanwhile the Board is actually meeting the situation for the brotherhood, and by so doing lays every church and minister under obligation to co-operate. Ministers may have differing opinions about some things, but they cannot deny a service of which they are themselves the beneficiaries.

FELLOWSHIP IN SPITE OF EXCOMMUNICATION.

HOW petty and futile seem the frenzied actions of the heretic-hunters and prosecutors in the presence of a noble victim. It is a radical test of a man's Christian quality to persecute him, to ostracize him, to tell lies about him, to excommunicate him. Some men grow great under such a test. Other men reveal the shallowness of their own spiritual life and their lack of deep-rooted conviction.

The great soul, shut out from the organized fellowship of his brethren, by their own unbrotherly act, finds spiritual companionship with unseen or remote souls whom he understands and who, he believes, understand him.

Such a soul feels the futility of decrees of excommunication and pities the people who imagine that they do God service by resorting to them.

This point of view was expressed by Mr. Frank E. Boren, an elder in Berkeley church, in California, and one of the delegates "excommunicated" from the state convention last summer. Returning home from the convention Mr. Boren wrote thus:

> Excommunicated! From what? Certainly not by or from my Lord Jesus Christ. I have even a deeper sense of fellowship with him. Not from spiritual fellowship with Thomas Campbell, Isaac Errett, J. H. Garrison, H. L. Willett. My sympathy with the high idealism of these men was never more complete. No game of politics can alter this. I was born a Disciple. For twenty-nine years I have been a member of the church. No petty ecclesiastical decree can change the loyal friendships or pleasant memories which those years have meant.
> Not from prayerful interest in the great missionary enterprise of the Disciples. I might even go so far as to secretly slip my little mite into the missionary offering. I refuse to believe that the action at Santa Cruz represents the spirit of the Disciples of the state. It would seem, indeed, that the logic of circumstances would compel the assumption that until such time as the Disciples of the state repudiate the action of the convention, such action represents their choice. But my faith in the people is such that I absolutely refuse to believe it. I am not excommunicated. So there!

Much the same sentiment was expressed by Rev. Edgar De Witt Jones in The Christian Century recently, in a review of a little book written by Rev. S. S. Lappin, editor of the Christian Standard. Mr. Jones, with characteristic gentleness, called attention to the dual personality of Mr. Lappin the editor, and Mr. Lappin the author of this tolerant and human little book. He declared his belief that Mr. Lappin had "written into this book his real generous self and that these pages show his attitude toward his brothers all." Then Mr. Jones quoted an exquisite quatrain from Edwin Markham which, much to our regret, was lost while the article was in the printers' hands. It ran thus:

> OUTWITTED.
> He drew a circle that shut me out—
> Heretic, rebel, a thing to flout.
> But Love and I had the wit to win:
> We drew a circle that took him in.

The attitude of love is not only the right but the winning attitude for those to take who suffer injustice at the hands of passion-blinded heretic-prosecutors. Thousands of his Christian brothers, some of them the direct objects of his attack, and others interested but unmentioned bystanders, watch the violent frenzy of the Christian Standard these days with sentiments of moral pity for its editor, sentiments which are so deep that they drown the minor feelings of vindictiveness and scorn.

In this attitude they attain a certain spiritual fellowship with him in spite of himself.

LATIN AMERICA AS A MISSION FIELD.

LATIN America, it will be remembered, was entirely omitted from the map of the mission field in whose behalf the great world missionary conference of 1910 convened in Edinburgh, Scotland. It was felt that diplomatic considerations with reference to the Roman Catholic Church made it inadvisable to classify as territory for Christian missions any country where Roman Christianity prevails.

Whatever is to be said as to the wisdom of making this exception—and we are not disposed to criticise it—it will hardly be disputed that the time is overdue for active steps to be taken by the Christian forces on behalf of Mexico and the countries of South and Central America which, though they are nominally Christian nations, need the enlightenment and emancipation of the gospel as much as does oriental paganism.

The call for a deliberative conference at Panama in February, 1916, issued by a committee representing the various Protestant mission boards of North America, to consider the problem of Christianizing Latin America, is therefore a timely announcement.

Dr. Robert E. Speer, as chairman of the committee, made requisition upon the Christian Woman's Board of Missions for the services of Mr. Guy S. Inman as Executive Secretary of the Conference, and the Board has granted his release.

The story of Mr. Inman's missionary success at Piedras Negras, Mexico, told to the readers of The Christian Century a few weeks ago, was previously well known among missionary leaders of all denominations. Mr. Inman's sympathetic understanding of the human side of Latin Americans, gained by wide travel throughout South and Central America and his long residence in Mexico, has made him the logical choice for "heading up" the proposed conference. He is in masterful possession of the Spanish language and has personal access to many political and industrial leaders of a number of the nations, besides those of Mexico with whom he has a wide circle of friendships.

Mr. Inman's task from now on will consist of creating and directing an interest in the Panama Conference both within the North American Church and among the representative men of Latin nations who may be in sympathy with Protestant efforts to meet the spiritual needs of their people.

Whether European missionary societies will be asked to participate in the conference is a matter that will not be decided until the return of Dr. John R. Mott who is now in Europe.

It is expected that the Panama Conference will do for Latin America what the Edinburgh Conference accomplished for the Asiatic and African mission field.

A CHANCE FOR ANOTHER APOLOGY.

ITS wanton and unscrupulous dealing with matters of fact has led the Christian Standard into several tight corners of late, from which it has been able to emerge only by clean-breasted apology on its editorial pages.

For three issues straight-running that paper contained apologies for its editor's wrong doings. The last one was headed "The Amende Honorable," but every discerning reader must have been prompted to say in his heart that the only honorable way to amend some things is to learn not to let things of that kind happen again.

Yet the uncharitable exploitation of the California newspaper account of the alleged utterances of Rev. H. J. Loken of Berkeley, upon his return from the Atlanta Convention, followed hard upon the aforesaid third apology.

The Christian Evangelist likewise made an even more uncharitable interpretation of the same matter.

That The Christian Century's guess as to what part of the newspaper story was furnished by an uninformed reporter's imagination, and what part was actual fact, came out pretty near the truth is not a matter of pride with us, for any Christian editor not blinded with passion and hatred could have done as well.

Two letters from Mr. Loken were received at this office, one enclosing the newspaper clippings and deploring the erroneous statements, written before he had seen the Standard or the Christian Evangelist, the other written after Mr. Loken had read the Evangelist's editorial. The later letter follows:

Dear Brother Morrison: I wrote you this morning regarding an article that had appeared in our California paper, the Christian Church News, of this month. I have since read the Christian Evangelist of Nov. 29 where an article on the same subject and in the same harsh strain appears. I am sending you the newspaper clipping of the original article in the Berkeley Gazette from which all the other daily papers copied theirs. I had no sooner got home than the Gazette was after me for a story, and I promised them I would tell them of my trip as soon as I had something in shape for them, but I asked them not to print anything till I gave it in myself. The reporter is personally a very good friend whom I have always trusted implicitly. But the paper that night printed its confused version of the story. You can easily imagine how confused an ordinary reporter is concerning ecclesiastical affairs and how perfectly natural it was for the paper to print just what it did. I dare say they thought they were doing me personally a great favor in what they did. For the paper is not unfriendly to me but has been a great help in my local work.

You will note how on the evening of the next day, Nov. 12, I specifically denied in the meeting before my church that any such construction should be put upon the fact of my credential being accepted by the General Convention as the paper put upon it, and my correction was published in the Gazette. I trust you will see clearly that the statements purporting to come from me in the paper are the work of reporters.

Now I do not intend to make any refutation of these things.

It is all too crude to take seriously. The statement that fifteen ministers refused to preach in the church appointed me at Atlanta, and that it was in a negro community, etc., is certainly rich. The chairman of the pulpit supply committee wrote me before I started from Berkeley asking me to preach at some church in Atlanta. I wrote back that I would. I took the church assigned me, an M. E. church South, and there was no hint given me by the committee that it was in any way a disreputable church or that anyone had refused to go out there! The name of the church was Brown Memorial Chapel.

Here is a sufficient occasion for another apology by the Christian Standard. It is perhaps expecting too much to ask that the Christian Evangelist make an "amende honorable" in a case in which the managing editor's personal feeling is so deeply involved as in this.

CHRISTIAN UNITY IN A CHURCH LETTER.

HOW far the churches have traveled from the old days when charges and countercharges of proselyting rent the air is evidenced by a church letter presented to First Christian Church, Cedar Rapids, Ia., by a lady who asked membership there. The pastor, Rev. Walter M. White, sends us the letter which reads as follows:

This certifies that Miss J. P. is an acceptable member of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., and that she is hereby dismissed at her own request, and commended to the Christian care and fellowship of the First Christian Church.

With the transfer of this sister, St. Paul's Church extends to the First Christian Church the most cordial Christian greetings, praying that this exchange of members may serve to bind the two churches into a closer fellowship and aid in bringing in the time for which our Master prayed when we shall all be one.

Done on behalf of St. Paul's Church by

E. J. LOCKWOOD,
Pastor.

Nov. 16, 1914.

This clearly testifies to the spirit of gracious and considerate Christian fellowship which characterizes the ministry of both Mr. White and Dr. Lockwood.

Yet if Mr. White were not the tender, coöperative, union-loving man that everybody knows him to be; if he could be conceived as ever setting covetous, proselyting eyes on any of the sheep of this neighboring Methodist fold, his impulses so to do would surely be deterred by the recollection of receiving a letter such as this from the trustful and kindly shepherd of those sheep.

After all, the best cure of proselyting is not to build the fences higher but to tear them down altogether.

UNDAUNTED.

YOU might expect that the hideous war across the sea would put such melancholy into the souls of the peace prophets that they would never talk again. But you would be ludicrously mistaken.

The war has seemed but to unloose the tongues of those who have caught the vision and grasped the principles of a war-less world. The breakdown of European political civilization and the turning of the continent into a vast shambles, instead of inhibiting peace talk has but evoked a sad-toned chorus of "We-told-you-so's" from the peace people.

In the arena of public opinion in the United States right now the biggest issue is that which is being joined between the peace principle and the war principle.

The militaristic forces are active.

The psychology of the hour is favorable to their side. Fear is easily created in the public mind. Bogeys and spooks can be conjured up with extraordinary facility. It can be made to seem footless and ridiculous to try to run the United States a minute longer with our contemptible little army and navy.

But the peace folks are organizing for action too.

Of course the Society for International Conciliation is ever active.

And now the churches of New York, Chicago and Buffalo are leading off in the organization of their religious forces on behalf of the peace policy of our government as against the militaristic policy. A luncheon attended by over one hundred leaders of the Jewish, Gentile, Catholic, Protestant, Liberal, and Evangelical religious forces of Chicago was given last Tuesday by the Church Peace Union of which Andrew Carnegie is the founder.

Judging by the speeches made by Rabbi Hirsch, Shailer Mathews, Jane Addams, Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Bishop Anderson, and Frederick Lynch of New York, there was left no doubt that the intelligent and courageous and really potent forces of Church and Synagogue could be counted upon to make undaunted and unrelenting war on war.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Emperor Helps a Christian Hospital.

Emperor Yoshihito has given $25,000 toward the foundation of St. Luke's International hospital in Tokio, which will be conducted under the auspices of the Episcopal Mission represented by Dr. Rudolph Teusler. This is a very unusual act for a Japanese emperor and it is thought will insure the success of an enterprise which involves the raising of a half a million of dollars. The emperor spoke of his desire of solidifying international understanding, and mentioned with special praise the labors for peace of President Wilson.

Gregorian Churches Take Advance Step.

The Gregorian churches of the orient have adopted the international Sunday-school lessons, and by this act have come a step closer to the Protestant movement of the west. The Coptic churches of Egypt have not taken this step yet, but they are opening their doors to missionaries who have come to them as councillors, and who are wisely undertaking to reform these churches from within.

Gideons Place More Bibles.

It was only five years ago that the Gideons, an organization of Christian traveling men, conceived the idea of placing Bibles in hotels. The idea came from England where an analogous organization had been at this work for forty-two years, though they had distributed only 17,000 Bibles in that time. In America, up to July, 1914, 237,000 Bibles have been placed in the hotels. It is said that only twenty hotel keepers have refused the Bibles and some of these have afterwards asked for the books. The organization claims that only three or four of the books placed have ever been stolen. A negro elevator boy, who stole one of the books, testified on the witness stand that he took it because it was such interesting reading.

Religious Telescope Has Anniversary.

The Religious Telescope, the general family organ of the United Brethren church, will celebrate its eightieth anniversary Dec. 31, 1914. Its first issue was printed in Circleville, O. This is one of the oldest denominational journals in the country and interprets the holdings of its denomination with a kindly spirit to other bodies.

Medical Missionaries Meet.

In spite of the confusion in mission fields as a result of the war in Europe, the interest and attendance at the sixth Interdenominational Medical Missionary Conference held in Battle Creek, Mich., Nov. 17-20 were in no wise diminished. Nearly 200 workers from home and foreign fields attended and the meeting was presided over by Bishop E. R. Hendrix of Kansas City. Among the notable addresses delivered were the following:

"Medicine in China," Rev. Isaac T. Headland, Pekin, China; "Better Organization for the Medical Work," Rev. Levi B. Salmans, Mexico; "Physiologic Therapeutics on the Mission Field," Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Battle Creek Sanitarium; "Forty-five Years in Asiatic Turkey," Rev. George C. Raynolds, M. D., D. D., Van, Turkey, "The Outlook for Missions in View of the War," Bishop Eugene R. Hendrix, D. D., President.

The Conference will meet again in 1915 in Battle Creek, Mich., the sessions being held at the local sanitarium.

Church Buys a Motor Truck.

The Grace Methodist Episcopal church of Chicago has adopted the motto, "The church that serves." It has a store where second hand goods are sold at very low prices to the poor, and in order to facilitate the gathering of these goods, the church has purchased a motor truck. This motor truck will be used in the summer to send groups of children from the slum districts to the country for a day's outing. The pastor is Rev. Elmer L. Williams, who secured the title of "the fighting parson" on account of his raids on vicious resorts in the neighborhood of his church. The church maintains a brotherhood home for boarding young men and a similar home for young women.

Unitarians Hold Street Meetings.

The Unitarians of Massachusetts are holding street meetings in various cities in the interest of temperance. They have purchased and equipped a motor car which carries the workers from city to city. Meetings were recently held in Fitchburg and Holyoke. These meetings are under the auspices of the Unitarian Temperance Society.

An Episcopal Tour of Africa.

Bishop Hartzell and Bishop Anderson of the Methodist Episcopal church recently met in England. They are booked to sail for Africa as soon as possible under present conditions. They will go to Cape Town and from there they will go northward 2,500 miles by rail to the Belgian Congo region where a new conference will be organized. Next the bishops will proceed to southern Rhodesia and Portuguese East Africa, holding conferences in each section. They will then go to Angola, Liberia, Madeira Islands and North Africa.

Russian to be Taught.

Home mission workers will be interested in the announcement that Prof. Samuel Northrup Harper has been appointed to an assistant professorship at the University of Chicago and will give courses in Russian language, literature and history. He is the son of William Rainey Harper, the first president of the university and has spent much time in Russia getting ready for the courses. There is a definite attitude on the part of many home mission leaders that young men of American birth and parentage should learn the language of the immigrant and prepare themselves for work in home missions in the same way that candidates for the foreign field prepare themselves.

Baptist Leader Goes from Coast to Coast.

Dr. James A. Francis has been for the past five years pastor of the Clarendon street Baptist church of Boston. This was his second pastorate in this church. During this pastorate the church has erected a new building. He has come to be widely known for his evangelistic success and for the merit of his contributions to social service. He was influential at the Sagamore Sociological Conferences. The First Baptist church of Los Angeles, Cal., has called him and he began his pastorate there the first of December. His departure from the east will be felt as a distinct loss to the Christian forces there.

Methodists Help Old Ministers.

The Methodists probably have the most efficient system of relief for old ministers that has come into any Protestant denomination. From being considered charitable relief to be given only to the poor, their stipends to aged and infirm ministers have been changed into a pension given to every man without regard to need. It is still customary, however, for ministers who have means to return the money. This organization paid out last year $1,100,000 and they need to spend $1,600,000 a year, so they are raising an endowment fund of ten millions. They have $350,000 in annual profits from their book concern which goes to this cause.

Rochester Gets Next General Assembly.

The next General Assembly of the Presbyterian church will be held in Rochester, N. Y., next year, in the Central Presbyterian church of that city. Rev. C. Waldo Cherry, the pastor of that church, has already begun active preparations for the entertaining of that religious gathering.

Noted Author Returns Home.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, the noted author, theologian and poet, who has been the ambassador to the Netherlands, returned to the United States Nov. 24. The purpose of his return was to have his eyes treated by an oculist, a famous specialist in New York. The past few months has meant a tremendous strain for him in caring for the war refugees in the Netherlands.

Episcopal Women May Vote.

A committee has spent a year in investigating the canonical law with reference to women voting in church elections in the Episcopal church in parochial matters. At the session of the diocesan convention held at the cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York, it was decided to extend the franchise to the women of the church.

Million Dollars for a Church.

The Trinity Methodist Episcopal church of South Los Angeles, California, has finished what is regarded by many as the most unique and inclusive church building to be found in the country. The price paid for it also places it in a class by itself. The total cost of the plant was a million dollars. It has a hotel, clubrooms, library, roof-garden, motion pictures, social parlors, and training classes all in one building. The building is nine stories high. The main auditorium is level with the sidewalk and will seat 2,300 people. The auditorium has a stage, an orchestra pit, stage curtains, drops and footlights. There is a banquet room that will seat a thousand people. There is a $25,000 pipe organ in the building with echo, harp and chimes. It is thought that guests in the hotel part of the building will be influenced by the environment to go to church.

Dr. Hillis Defines Neutrality.

The Sunday Evening Club is an institution which provides for Sunday evening services in a down town theater in Chicago, bringing a new speaker upon the platform every Sunday, a man of national reputation being secured in most cases. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis spoke before this club on Dec. 6. Dr. Hillis had a good word for all the nations of Europe except the Turk. He said. "I hope to live long enough to see the Turk driven out of Europe." He also defined his idea of neutrality. "I refuse," Dr. Hillis said, "to interpret neutrality on the part of Americans as meaning silence on the questions at stake in the war. If to be neutral requires that I shall be silent, I refuse to be neutral. I decline to add God and the devil together and then divide them. We must stand for the civilization our fathers achieved." Dr. Hillis prophesied that there will be a United States of Great Britain as we now have the United States of America, involving the reorganization of the British empire, as a result of the present war.

Mormons Grow Rich.

Fifteen years ago the Mormon church began a systematic campaign to make effective their principle of tithing their members. It is now well recognized that a Mormon who does not tithe is not a good Mormon unless for a special reason he has been excused by the church. This organization recently erected one of the great hotels of America at a cost of two millions of dollars and paid for it with one year's tithes. The hierarchy is interested heavily in the sugar beet trust, the Union Pacific railway, and in many another important enterprise of the west.

Gather Statistics on Family Worship.

The Christian Examiner of New York gives the account of some investigations made in certain churches regarding religious practices in the homes. In one church, in answer to the inquiry, "Do you have family prayer?" nearly fifty per cent answered "Yes." In answer to the second inquiry "Did your parents maintain a family altar?" sixty-six per cent answered "Yes." In another church, a larger number answered yes to the first question than to the second.

Baptists and Congregationalists Federate.

At a joint business meeting held recently by the Baptist and Congregational churches of Hampden, Mass., it was voted that the two churches federate. They will hold services alternately in the two churches for a time. They are now seeking a pastor who can enter into the spirit of the federation. In the end, the federated congregation will have but one meeting house.

More Money for City Missions.

The Congregational City Missionary Society of Chicago will hold its annual meeting at the Auditorium Hotel on Dec. 10. The speakers on this evening will be Dr. Leroy Burton of New York, general secretary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, and Rev. William E. Barton of Oak Park. Plans will be presented in the meeting to increase the endowment of the society from $300,000 to $500,000. Rev. J. C. Armstrong has been superintendent of this society for twenty-five years and through his labors Chicago has been made the leading center of Congregationalism in the world, in point of number of churches and members.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

THE BAPTIST COURIER.

EMPTYING AN ORDINANCE.

In his book on The Meaning of Baptism, Rev. C. C. Morrison, a minister of the Disciples' church, makes this statement: "The apostles did not preach baptism: they preached Christ and baptized those who accepted him, with as little consciousness of the formality as such as we now put into the ceremony of the right hand of fellowship." The burden of the book seems to be to prove that baptism is simply an initiatory ordinance receiving its whole meaning from the social fellowship into which it inducts one. According to this view baptism is practically nothing and church membership is everything. It removes the stability of the ordinance and makes it subject to the changing life of the church. Baptism becomes a mere method of getting into the church and while perhaps the Scripture form of the ordinance is the more advisable, yet since other forms get people into the church they have all that is really essential. We may well ask if this view accords with the New Testament. We believe that it not only does not, but that is empties baptism of the meaning Christ and his apostles gave the ordinance.

In the New Testament baptism is associated with a profound experience that is individual rather than social. It relates one not so much to a human fellowship as to God. It is a declaration of one's own death to sin and rising to a new life and symbolizes the gospel by which this individual experience is wrought. If Lazarus had received an ordinance to commemorate his experience with the grave it could hardly have been said that the ordinance was simply a formality of initiation into human fellowship again; for it would not have been related to his social life that followed but it would always have looked backward to the wonderful individual and divine experience by which he became again a living man. Baptism thus stands in the New Testament. It is, it is true, a prerequisite to church membership. But it is not an initiatory rite. Its purpose is to symbolize the great act and gospel by which one becomes a child of God: and it is intended forever to hold the mind back to that act and gospel. This is its use. A very slight examination of the New Testament will be sufficient to confirm these statements.

It is a mistake to say that the apostles did not preach baptism. In the first and only sermon Philip preached to the eunuch he made the place of baptism so plain to him that the eunuch of his own accord asked for the ordinance. He could have learned of it from no other source than Philip's discourse. This sermon was a sample of the apostolic method.

It is a mistake to speak of baptism as a mere prefix to church fellowship. In the commission itself it is not church membership that is singled out as the great thing that preaching is to lead the nations to, but it is baptism that has this mention. "baptizing them;" and the words that follow indicate that baptism stands for that profound individual experience by which one becomes a child of the Triune God, "into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." To talk of this baptism being a mere initiatory ordinance to a human fellowship is to empty the passage of its meaning.

It is a mistake to say that baptism gets all of its significance and value from the social fellowship into which it inducts one. Rather it is truer to say that, according to the New Testament, the church life gets its meaning from baptism. This was the use the apostles made of the ordinance. By the memory of baptism they held their erring converts back to that great original experience, to the gospel that wrought it and to the life it declared. "Know ye not that all we who were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death. . . . Even so we also should walk in newness of life." "Was Paul crucified for you? Or were ye baptized into the name of Paul?" In the New Testament baptism did not shape itself to a church fellowship. Rather baptism was the fixed, pole star by which the church life was to guide itself. It was the abiding form of the true Christian life, the unchanging pattern of what the church was ever to seek to be.

THE BAPTIST BANNER.

The Meaning of Baptism, by C. C. Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, is a new book of more than ordinary interest. We haven't the pleasure of knowing Mr. Morrison but he is vouched for by those who are reliable as being neither eccentric nor a seceder. We say this by reason of the fact that he launches out on entirely new lines, thinks for himself, and dares to write down just what he thinks. If we understand what he writes he is far from being in accord with his own brethren and he doesn't hesitate to call Mr. Campbell, and especially his expositions into question. He stoutly maintains the "Open Church Policy" and in order to do so, does not hesitate to say that baptism is not an ordinance but an "initiating ceremony into the Christian community." Again he speaks of it as "A function of the social organ of religion—the church," and proceeds to say: "Its whole meaning is derived from the Church." Following such a statement, it is not strange that he calls in question the commission of our Lord as given by Matthew. But we do not mean to condemn the book. It is learned and is written in excellent spirit and fine style. It is eminently suggestive and well worth the price and a careful reading. It is a book of 225 pages, and may be had of the Disciples' Publication Society, of Chicago. Price, $1.25.

The Visitor

"Cap and Gown Day" at Drake University is the mid-year festival of the Senior class. It marks the first appearance of the graduating body in academic costume, and their recognition by the institution, and especially by the Junior class, as worthy of the honors of the final year.

In this last phase of the day's program there is made clear the passing of those ancient forms of horse-play that once marked the intercourse of Juniors and Seniors. Time was when humor passed into brutality in the efforts of each class to prove its superiority. In some institutions those archaic customs still persist. But it is a sign of the times that in the better class of colleges they have ceased to have vogue.

The Visitor was "among those present" at this annual celebration last week. The Senior class of the Arts College numbers more than half a hundred. The number of young men and young women appeared to be about equal.

Professor Herbert Martin, of the department of Philosophy is the "Class Father" of the group. According to an admirable custom, one of the members of the faculty is adviser to each class, and thereby earns his title. On this occasion the class and its paternal counsellor received an armful of roses from the Junior class in token of good will, and as an aesthetic substitute for more vigorous and less desirable gifts once bestowed.

The exercises took place in the University Chapel. The Faculty appeared in academic dress. The procession of the Seniors, in cap and gown, marched through the ranks of the Juniors to their places in the hall. A program of music was rendered, and Dr. Medbury, university chaplain, offered prayer.

President Bell spoke of the significance of special days in the academic calendar, and the value of Cap and Gown Day. He then introduced Dean Norton, as the chairman of the day, and paid a fitting compliment to his seven years of service as head of the College of Arts, and the raising of educational standards at Drake as the result of his efforts.

Dean Norton, in his address in introduction of the speaker of the day, made still clearer the meaning of the occasion, and laid admirable stress upon the standard of scholarship and of character which must be maintained by each member of the class if the coveted honor of graduation at the end of the year was to be achieved.

The large number of visitors present from University Place and the city showed that the events of the college year at Drake are of interest to the entire community.

In the afternoon at four there was an assembly of the students of the Bible College, for an address on "The Ministry and the New Age." Dean Kirk has reason to be proud of the body of young men and women who are preparing at Drake for the ministry, the mission field, and other forms of religious work.

They come from many parts of our own land, and from other lands. Many of them preach regularly for churches within reaching distance of Des Moines. Most of them plan to go on to more extensive forms of graduate work upon completion of the course in the Bible College. Drake students are found in graduate divinity studies at the University of Chicago, Union and Yale, and they are among the best of the graduate bodies of Disciples to be found in each of those institutions.

It seemed a far call from the cloistered quiet of University Place to the stress and excitement of an evening at Billy Sunday's big tabernacle.

The Visitor had learned on his first arrival in Des Moines that the big revival was in its fifth week. On the streets and in the street cars there were many signs of the fact. At a luncheon served at Professor Martin's hospital home there was hardly any other topic of conversation in the group that included President Bell, Dean Norton, Dr. Medbury, Dr. Idleman and Mr. Givens.

Many opinions are expressed regarding Mr. Sunday and his work. The churches, with few exceptions, have gone into the meeting earnestly. If not all were convinced that it was wise, they have at least made no protest, and have "played the game."

There are those who believe that great good is being done, and that the work of the churches will be made easier by the meeting. This is Dr. Medbury's feeling.

Others recognize the admirable results reached in a multitude of cases, but fear the reaction after the meetings are over, and the interpretation which religion is likely to find in the minds of many who listen to the evangelist.

Others still believe that little but harm can come from the crude theology, slangy vernacular, and often vulgar forms of speech which are in evidence.

Yet no one doubts the tremendous earnestness and sincerity of the man. His plan of work is mechanically perfect. His helpers are efficient, and the public demonstration of approval is gratifying.

On the day the Visitor was there the two sermons, afternoon and evening, were identical. Mr. Sunday has a few "big features," and his sermons on "Amusements," "Booze," and some others of like sensational type are used several times in the course of a meeting. In the afternoon the Senior class of Drake went in a body to hear the one on "Amusements," and it was the same sermon that the Visitor heard in the evening.

We had been warned that we should reach the tabernacle before seven o'clock. But later there came a hurry-up message saying that we could not be sure of getting in if we arrived later than six. It was a little after that when we got there and every entrance was blocked. Only through the good offices of Dr. Idleman were we admitted at all. But with his help we secured sittings in the section allotted to ministers at one side of the speaker's platform.

The tabernacle is built after the model on which all of Mr. Sunday's buildings are put up. It is a huge, rectangular wooden structure, seating at least eight thousand people. Every available space was occupied and it was the same in the afternoon, as we learned.

Mr. Rodehever, Mr. Sunday's leader of song, was in charge of the service, which apparently began as soon as the tabernacle was reasonably full, and continued till nearly seven o'clock. About that time the evangelist appeared, and from that moment onward he was in constant evidence. Even while the music was still going on, led by the large chorus choir, Mr. Sunday was walking up and down the platform, giving directions to his assistants, to the door-keepers, to the ushers, and to everybody else in sight.

Prof. Herbert Martin, "Father" of the Senior Class, Drake University.

Then the leader of song called out the names of several delegations that were expected that night—three of them were from high schools, and the others from Des Moines College, Drake University, and the City Hall. They responded with school yells, and everybody cheered. Then came a solo, the offering for two Des Moines charities—and the preacher mounted the little platform with its simple wood reading desk, and the sermon began.

It was a plain, straightforward handling of the subject of amusements from the standpoint of one who believes that all dancing, card playing and theater going is harmful and inexcusable on the part of Christians. The preacher followed his note book very closely. Whole paragraphs were read from it.

His language was for the most part well chosen and dignified. There were lapses into slang and rough speech, but they seemed to be deliberate, and not spontaneous. You would expect Mr. Sunday to use good language all the time. His preaching shows that he can do it, and that his coarser speech is assumed for the sake of the effect. Is it an aid or a hindrance to the best results, and is it quite genuine?

His voice was very husky when he began, but cleared up as he went on. He seemed to make everybody hear in the big tabernacle and there was much laughter and frequent cheering.

The sermon lasted fully an hour. Toward the close there came frequent appeals for decision, particularly on the subject of amusements. The end came rather abruptly, with a call for all who wished to make the right choice to come down to the front and take him by the hand. At that signal the fifty or more ushers, in various parts of the house came down the aisles, and that created a current of forward moving people in which it was easy to join.

The handshaking was unique. Mr. Sunday has a sort of trap door by the side of his pulpit. This he lifted as the people began to go forward, and descending two or three stairs, he could reach down and take the uplifted hands. They came by twos and threes at first, the music meantime swelling into the great volume, led by the choir.

When perhaps a hundred people had shaken hands with him, he went back to the platform, closed the trap door, and walked about, lifting his arms to beckon those who still waited, and the tide once again set in. Down the stairs he would go, shake hands with the group that had gathered, then back again. Sometimes he would stand with one foot on a chair and the other on the top of the desk, then he would swing down with the agility of an acrobat, and throwing one foot high in the air, bend over to catch some extended hand.

As fast as the people came forward the seats immediately in front of the platform were cleared to make room for them. The response that night was the best there had been at any time and Mr. Sunday was in high spirits. On some previous occasions, I learned he had been greatly disappointed at the results, and had gone after the ministers in the most vigorous speech, charging them with indifference and inaction. But that night there were several hundred who responded.

But among them there must have been a considerable percentage of Christian people who regarded the act as a fresh dedication of their lives, or as a renunciation of certain amusements. And there was also a large number of quite young children at the afternoon meetings. I am told great numbers of children, quite too young to know the significance of their acts, have come forward. So that the total number of those whose names are taken must far outrun the actual conversions. How many even of these will be added to the churches is one of the problems the ministers of DesMoines are facing.

The meeting closed with the act of getting the names of those who had come forward, and a prayer by Mr. Sunday. Standing on the top of his reading desk, he prayed in his characteristic way, very earnestly, very familiarly and very unconventionally. There seems to be no instruction to the converts as to what they are to do next. Doubtless they are left to the ministers. But it will be strange if the ministers do not find on the cards handed to them names of many of their most faithful workers, as well as of little children, far too young to enter the church.

I was told that I could hardly judge Billy Sunday by that meeting, either as to the vigor and picturesqueness of his speech, the freedom of his address to God and to the devil, or the exciting nature of his acrobatic performances. But it was easy to see the possibilities even from the restrained conduct of that evening.

And still the question remains unanswered: Is this type of evangelism a help or a hindrance to the progress of the kingdom of God?

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The Unknown Guest. By Maurice Maeterlinck. Readers of the earlier work of this fascinating Belgian find themselves somewhat at a loss to follow him into his later studies in the occult. He is the sort of symbolist, or as some would call him mystic, who touches with beauty and mystery whatever theme he discusses. In the years of his successive volumes of essays and of symbolistic plays one felt that he brought to all his work a master gift of description which still left one with a haunting sense of elusiveness, which was perhaps its chief charm.

But in later years he has abandoned somewhat his nature studies which made "The Life of the Bee" so marvelous a description of an almost unknown world, and his poetic and semi-philosophical reflections upon life, and has taken his way into the realm of the supernormal. One saw it coming in a single chapter of "The Buried Temple." Much more fully it appeared in "La Mort," which was translated a year since under the title "Our Eternity." In the present work he shows himself an interested, though not very skilled, interpreter of psychic studies following particularly such writers as Osty, Bozzano and Duchatal, and the proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research. It is to be feared that M. Maeterlinck will please few by his latest adventure. Earlier admirers will regret his departure into the world of phantoms and psychometry. The psychical researchers will hardly care to have their problems popularized in this easy-going and poetic spirit. And as for the psychologists, of course they will decline to admit that beyond some vague phenomena of the subconscious there is any value whatever in the subject.

But Maeterlinck is quite in earnest none the less. He presents not a little of the data relating to phantasms of the living and the dead, portents, premonitions, and knowledge of the future, and then attempts in his own charming but rather superficial manner to comment, define, and explain. The title of the book is his nuame for the mysterious, subconscious faculty, so much wider in its inclusiveness than the intellect, yet so little under the control of personality. So far as we are able to judge, he would make this little-known region the clearing-house for all the mysterious phenomena which spiritists and many other types of people claim for their own.

Quite the most interesting chapter deals with the Elberfeld horses, those wonderful educated animals, the report of whose feats in mathematics and other fields have been widely published.

Leaving to the students of mystery on the one side, and to the psychologists upon the other, their conclusions regarding this excursion into unknown regions, practiced readers of Maeterlinck will travel with their favorite author through these pages, enjoying the unfailing charm of his word and manner, and reserving the right to think as they will of his conclusions. The Man of Nazareth. By Frederick Lincoln Anderson. The author of this vigorous treatment of the life of Jesus is professor of New Testament interpretation in Newton Theological Seminary, and a son of Professor Galusha Anderson recently of the University of Chicago. The treatment of the life and character of Jesus is original and full of suggestiveness. In introducing the Master he says, "When the clouds of dust raised by centuries of conflict and criticism finally lift, we should see that the naked fact is that a new type of man, fresh, strong and unique, appeared in our race in the first century."

The difficulties which Jesus met in connection with his claim to be the Messiah are clearly pointed out by Prof. Anderson. He shows how far from Jesus' idea was the popular conception of the Messiah. More than this, it was a dangerous idea even if he had shared it. "A political Messiah, a warrior Messiah, a king of the Jews, such as the people and especially the Zealots expected, would be a traitor to the Romans, would receive short shrift at their hands if unsuccessful, and, if successful, must lead an insurrection against them. All these were abhorrent to Jesus. Yet how could he call himself Messiah and not awaken the hopes and suggest these popular connotations? This was a vital and tragic problem for Jesus, and one to which he was constantly alive. In an atmosphere palpitating with zealotism, he naturally never went about claiming to be the Messiah, as many seem to think, but always exercised a holy discretion and reserve on this point." Particularly interesting are the two chapters, "How Jesus Handled Legalism," and "Jesus' Positive Teaching." In the perfectly unconventional manner in which the author goes about his work one is reminded of Prof. Seeley and his volume, "Ecce Homo." (Macmillan. $1 net.)

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

National American Woman Suffrage Association in its Forty-Sixth Convention

The Annual Suffrage Convention was held at Nashville on November 12-18, and will be memorable in the recollections of all who were privileged to attend it. The suffrage colors were in evidence everywhere, not only the headquarters, the Hotel Hermitage, being elaborately decorated, but the stores and other buildings in the city as well. The House of Representatives hall in the State Capitol was given for the business meetings, and the convention was welcomed by the mayor of Nashville, the governor of the state, and the Senior United States Senator from Tennessee. The Nashville papers gave extended reports and friendly editorials, and many charming social functions furnished the needed recreation from the severe strain of the business sessions.

THE STATES RIGHTS PARTY.

The suffrage movement has now reached that inevitable stage of success, where there is no longer unanimity as to the methods by which the great goal is to be reached. In the twelve states and one territory where women now have the franchise, the victory has been won by amending the state constitutions. The southern states are generally in favor of continuing this as the policy of the association, and a Southern States Woman's Conference was held at Chattanooga immediately preceding the Nashville meeting, in which they affirmed their belief in this doctrine. This is in line with the historic position of the South for states rights—a position that is emphasized by the problem of enfranchising the hosts of negro women in that section. The leaders of this party, who favored adhering strictly to the policy that has been so successful in the past, were Miss Kate Gordon, of Louisiana, and Miss Laura Clay, of Kentucky.

SUFFRAGE BY FEDERAL AMENDMENT.

But there is a strong sentiment in the association in favor of trying to secure the ballot for women by a shorter route, and that is by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. During the past year the National Board has had a Congressional Committee at Washington, headed by Mrs. Medill McCormick which has been working for two bills now before Congress: one is the Bristow-Mondell bill, which asks that the Federal Constitution be so amended, with the concurrence of the required number of state legislatures, as to give all women in the United States, having the qualification of male voters, the right of full suffrage. The other, called the Shafroth Amendment, provides that any state may submit the question of woman suffrage to popular vote on petition of one-eighth of the qualified voters.

Another protesting element in the convention was the Congressional Union, which endorsed the militant program of "black listing" all congressmen and political parties who opposed woman suffrage legislation.

And then, there were some Federal Amendment advocates who were bitterly opposed to the Shafroth idea of submission to the voters by initiative petition, and who urged putting all the strength of the Association on the passage of the Bristow-Mondell Amendment.

All of this made a fine and interesting fight. After days of warm and wearing argument, the "black listers" were voted down and the following resolution prevailed:

"That the National American Woman Suffrage Association is absolutely opposed to holding any political party responsible for the acts and opinions of its individual members, or holding any individual, public official candidate responsible for the action of his party on the question of woman suffrage."

Which was an uncommonly sensible thing for the convention to do!

The other objections were met by endorsing all the three methods proposed —the two bills now pending before Congress and continuing the policy of securing amendments to State Constitutions, whenever practicable—in other words, get the ballot for women in any way you can, provided it be honorable and dignified.

In the election of officers Miss Jane Addams declined to run again for First Vice President, but consented to let her name go on the ticket as Honorary Vice President. The association honored itself by electing as one of its new officers Dr. Katharine Bement Davis, Commissioner of Corrections in New York City.

AN OCCASION OF THANKSGIVING.

The great joy of the convention was over the two new suffrage states, Nevada and Montana; Miss Annie Martin and Miss Jeannette Rankin, who lead the forces as state presidents, were the heroines of the occasion.

The addition of Nevada and Montana to the number of suffrage states gives equal suffrage seven more electoral votes, enfranchises 9,881 women, increases the amount of suffrage territory by 256,901 square miles and increases the suffrage population by 457,928.

Full equal suffrage now prevails over 1,738,040 square miles of the United States, or nearly one-half (49 per cent) of the total area.

Women now have an equal voice with men in casting 91 electoral votes, or more than one-sixth of the total number in the electoral college.

The total number of women over 21 years of age in the states where women can vote for president of the United States is 3,676,532 (1910 census).

The total population of the full equal suffrage states is now 8,253,240 (1910 census).

The total population of the states where women can vote for president of the United States is 13,891,831, or 15 per cent of the total population of the United States.

I. W. H.

GOVERNOR'S WIFE WANTS A VOTE.

When the equal suffrage amendment is submitted to the voters of New York state next November the woman who will then be presiding over the Executive Mansion at Albany will be watching with the suffragists and sharing their hopes of victory.

Mrs. Charles S. Whitman, wife of the new governor of the Empire State, is a most optimistic type of suffragist. "One has only to look at our Western States," says Mrs. Whitman, "to see the benefit of the reform. Often, however, it seems to me that one need look no further than home. Working for suffrage has done much for women. It has made them think. Once a woman becomes a thinking woman, her scope of usefulness is materially increased; she makes a better wife and mother, and is apt to get a fairer view of life than her unthinking sister, who is prone to magnify the petty things that really do not matter.

"Equal suffrage," Mrs. Whitman adds, "is a matter of education. Steady, persistent appeals to the voters, love of justice and fair play are bound, eventually, to reach the goal."

A SOUTHERN STORY.

Mary Johnston told a quaint story at the recent National Suffrage Convention in Nashville. A commercial traveler, she said, once found himself stranded at the railroad station in a tiny southern hamlet, with hours to wait for the next train. He looked around for some means of amusement. There was nothing in sight on the platform except an old colored man and an enormous watermelon.

The drummer began to chaff the old man, and asked him if he could eat that whole watermelon at one sitting. The old man said he did not know. Finally the drummer offered him a dollar if he would perform the feat. "Ef you will hold dat offer open for a little while, I'll see," said the old fellow. He went away. In about half an hour he came back and said confidently that he could eat the whole melon, which he at once proceeded to do. The traveler gave him the dollar, and then asked him why he went away before undertaking the task.

"I'll tell you, sah," answered the old man. "I had another melon at home, just de size of dat one. I knowed if I could eat dat melon at home, I could eat dis one here; so I went home and eat it."

Miss Johnston pointed out that equal suffrage had already been tried and found to work well. She said: "We have eaten the melon of Australia, New Zealand, Finland, Alaska, and I don't know how many Western States, and we shall soon eat the melon of the whole country!"

ANY WOMAN TO HER SOLDIER.

Today I spoke, in words aflame and bright—
Bade you farewell with smiles so bravely worn
I doubt if you could fathom the black night
Which crowds upon me, now that you are gone!

I would not let your memory hold one tear
Shed, in our last sweet hours together, by me;
My love and pride could dominate my fear,
My agony was not for you to see!

But ah! beneath each word so gayly said
A trembling prayer for safety made its cry;
So, only must a woman voice her dread
When she beholds her man go forth to die!

For every thousand men at work in New Jersey there are 276 women employed.

Policewomen at Chicago have been assigned to protect women and girls at railroad stations.

Out of a revenue of about $20,000,000 Switzerland is this year to spend $9,150,000 on its army.

Jesus, the World's Saviour

REVIEW LESSON—DEC. 27.

By John R. Ewers.

And thus we come to the end. For a whole year we have had the pleasure of studying the greatest life known to earth. Biography is always fascinating and finds a large place in the reading of earnest men. What is more interesting than seeking to determine the successful elements that made the men and women, whose life-histories are preserved, great? We read, spellbound, of the worthies of ancient Greece and Rome. What romance surrounds the saints and sages of mediaeval days. We never tire of the stories of the painters, poets and kings of the renaissance. The outstanding characters of more modern times hold us with a strange power. Biography—Loyola cried out, "What these have done, I can do!"

JESUS, SAVIOUR.

If I were permitted to build a great church I would want the privilege of carving over the doors, "The Church of Our Saviour." There is no more precious word—"Saviour." It will do us good to meditate upon that wonderful word, "Saviour." Not only from what, but unto what. It is something to save the native of Bolenge from the horrors of sin; it is more to save him unto Christian manhood, and what shall we say of eternal life!

THE EFFECT OF THE YEAR.

Napoleon's test was, "Well, what did he do?" What have you accomplished in this splendid year of grace? Have you led any of your class to accept this Christ? Have you been conscious of a development of Christian culture? Has anything good happened in your school or church because of this biography? Or has it been a lifeless performance? What have you brought to pass? We have been celebrating Moody's entrance into the celestial world. What did he do? Let his church of 3,000 members, with its crown of missionaries, answer. Let his two schools, one for poor girls and one for poor boys, with 4,000 students, answer. Let Drummond, Stalker, Speer, Mott and Dr. John MacKensie answer. Let the thousands of converts answer. And do you know why Moody did all of this? One time, when he first entered the Christian life, he saw this statement, "God has never, since the days of Paul, had one man who has given himself unreservedly to His service." And Moody said, "I will be that man." Thus are we led up to our

GOLDEN TEXT.

"Far be it from me to glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." In the Mt. Vernon Congregational Church in Boston, you may still see written in the book, "Mr. Moody states that his prevailing intention is to give up his will to God." There is the secret of a powerful life.

LIFTED UP.

At the end of this year's study Christ should be so exalted that all men should be drawn to him. Unfortunately many teach the Christ of doctrine, the effigy of orthodoxy, the straw-man, even the scarecrow of greed. Shailer Mathews well observes in a recent editorial in the "Biblical World," "Orthodoxy, like socialism, failed to keep us from war. We can be orthodox and put Him to an open shame." The effect of this year's work should cause us to love the person of Christ and to follow him sincerely. We should see the Lord high and lifted up.

GLORY IN WHAT?

Paul might have glorified, had he been like some of us, in his family, his education, his oratory, his facinating personality, his power over men, but he choose to glory only in the eternal Christ. There are fading glories and there are glories that grow brighter.

THE VOICE FROM BEHIND.

ing purposes embrace all accidents converting them to good" and her life and work were based on that belief.

VI.

Her unfaltering belief that the only life worth while is the life of service. The ability to serve wisely and well is life's true grandeur. She realized, as few are privileged to do, the Master's ideal. "He that would be great among you, let him become the servant of all." Our prayer is that the mantle of service, that so gracefully covered her slender form may fall upon the shoulders of some other prophet or prophetess in our spiritual Israel. Like Elisha, we intercede for a double portion of her spirit. Her life has taught us the moral grandeur of a life hid with Christ in God. The only thing that will endure, after all the scaffolding has fallen away, will be life, full, rich, abundant life.

PRAYER.

We thank Thee, O God, for the leaders and teachers Thou hast sent to the world from time to time, to bring a new vision of Thee to humanity. We thank Thee for their courage, their persistence and their heroic endurance. Into their labors we have entered and by their heroic sacrifices we are richer. We pray Thee to raise up other such spirits that Thy slumbering Church may be aroused, that the complacent and self-satisfied may be stirred to such zeal that cross-bearing may become a real passion.

Fill us all with a passion to make known the knowledge of Thee in the face of Jesus Christ. Hasten the day when the voice shall be heard, saying "The Kingdoms of the world have become the Kingdom of our Lord and His Christ." Unto Thee, we commit our blessed dead; unto Thee, we commit our loved ones who still abide. We pray Thee that conscious of thy unwearied care for us we may live and die as unto the Lord. Pilgrims in a world of change and decay, we rejoice that we have access to one who is the same yesterday, today and forever. Mariners on a storm-tossed sea, do Thou speak peace to our souls, do Thou direct us to the haven of peace where storms are not, and may we meet our Pilot face to face when the voyage is past. Teach our unwilling tongues to say "Thy will be done," and do lead us along the way of blessed ministry, of communion and triumphant trust, until the day break and the shadows flee away forever. We ask all of thee through Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

THE FUTURE PREACHER—THREE WAYS TO PRAY HIM

He is clear-eyed, level-headed, sure-footed, sound of faith and true of heart. He could succeed in law, medicine, agriculture or engineering. He expects to land a normal life and rear a family. He must think of them as well as of himself and his work.

1. Remember on Christmas Sunday the men who forget themselves for Christ.
2. Give a worthy share of the church's Budget.
3. Put a Bequest or Annuity into the Permanent Fund.

THE PRESENT PREACHER—THREE WAYS TO STAY HIM

He is in the midst of his usefulness and at the zenith of his power. Time, strength, money, have been given without reserve. Now some provision must be made for his old age and his family. Shall he turn aside, wholly or in part, to money-making?

1. By practical co-operation, recognize the gospel as the world's supreme need.
2. Remember God's law, "They that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel."
3. By pension to his predecessor, give him a guarantee for his old age.

THE PAST PREACHER—THREE WAYS TO PAY HIM

His strength is spent, his work is done, his comrades have departed. The light of heaven is on his brow. The church which he built up by his abundant labors and enriched out of his affluent life, cannot afford to let him suffer.

1. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest."
2. Let his parents know that every family in the church shares the Great Commission.
3. Secure an impartial hearing for Christ's call by your loyalty to His aged Ambassadors.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 23.

The Christmas Spirit. 2 Cor. 8:7-12; Phil. 2:4-11; Luke, 2:8-14.

It is better to have the Christmas spirit than to talk about it. I have heard many sermons and speeches intended to explain the meaning of Christmas and I must say that I never got much out of them. The speaker seems to fall below his best. A few writers have given us Christmas stories worth reading. It may be that the reason our discussions are so profitless is that life at the Christmas season is so full of activity and joy that we resent an analysis of it. The poet and the singer offer welcome aid. We like the story that presents life at its best. But solemn preachments—we cannot endure them. If the preacher is a poet, we may listen to him.

THE SPIRIT OF PLAY.

Of course we ought to be serious and to magnify our work, but there is something ludicrous in the solemnity with which many of us approach our work. We act as if the stars would fly out of their courses if we should deviate from the plans we have laid down. It is well enough for us to feel our responsibility: we ought to, but there are some loads we need not try to carry. The seasons will come and go whether we worry about them or not. Other people will do their own thinking even if we refrain from advising them what they ought to think. Christmas comes to break the monotony of the daily grind. We may object to the interference, but we usually catch the spirit of the season and relax a little.

COMRADESHIP.

We play in groups. We may try to hide sorrow; joy we wish to share. Men, women, and children pool their interests during the season of Christmas. Labor, school, and age tend to draw us apart. Anything that reminds us of our common humanity is to be accounted good. Differences in religious beliefs divide us. Why should we not unite in a community celebration of Christmas? If we work together, we can have better music, more attractive decorations, and intensify loyalty to the community. Why should theology and church organizations have anything to do with the festivities in honor of the birth of Christ? The watchful theologian who has assumed the burden of thinking for the people may have doubts about such a procedure; those who believe in the unity of the disciples of Jesus will approve it. It is possible that the recreations of Christians are doing more for unity than all our discussions. Unity comes from life, not from mechanical devices.

THE SPIRIT OF GIVING.

"The best thing to give your enemy is forgiveness; to an opponent, tolerance; to your friend, your heart; to your child, a good example; to a father, deference; to your mother, conduct that will make her proud of you; to yourself, respect; to all men, charity." All these gifts have the highest value. They benefit the giver and the receiver. The giver can never regret that he gave them and the receiver forfeits none of his independence by accepting them. The obligations they impose are such as all men ought to assume. Saadi had in mind gifts of another kind when he said: "Independence is of more value than any gifts: and to receive gifts is to lose it. Men most commonly seek to oblige thee only that they may engage thee to serve them." Christmas giving has become a burden because it is so largely formal. Jesus bade his disciples give to those that had need. If we can not first give ourselves, it will be to our credit if we omit the formality of giving. "Not what we give, but what we share." This is the great law of Christmas giving.

Our Readers' Opinions

DISCIPLES NEED A HYMNAL.

Editor The Christian Century:

I noted with considerable interest your editorial with reference to the music in the Atlanta Convention, published a couple of weeks ago, and while I was not at the convention, from other observations I wish to heartily second the sentiments expressed in your article. A song leader in Mr. Hackleman's position, and with his standing, has a wonderful opportunity.

There is just one matter which I would like to mention, however, in this connection. A few weeks ago I requested from the Disciples Publication Society samples of hymnals to assist in selecting a book for one of our organizations here in Peoria. We examined the two which you furnished with a great deal of interest, but I must say I could see no improvement in them over those published by Mr. Hackleman. I wish that the publishing houses of the Disciples would produce a class of hymnals such as that upheld in your editorial. As it is, to obtain the best hymnals we must go to the publishing houses of other religious bodies, while many of our congregations insist on being loyal to our own. This criticism is offered in a kindly spirit and with a hope that we may have something better in the future. I am longing and looking forward to the time when the Disciples will take their place along the side of other communions who are more advanced in the matter of music, for I consider music one of the strongest aids in the spiritual development of a congregation.

Edward N. Miller,
Peoria, Ill. Organist Central Church.

[The books referred to above as furnished by the Disciples Publication Society were not publications of this house, but were our selection of the best books published by our people. These books have many excellencies but by no means satisfy the ideals cherished by us. It is perhaps not premature to announce at this time that the editor and contributing editor of The Christian Century have been for a long time working out a hymnal which the Disciples Publication Society hopes soon to put on the market.—The Editor.]

APPROVES EDITORIAL POLICY.

Editor The Christian Century:

Permit me to express my very cordial appreciation of your editorial in the "Century," of November 19, "Some Questions as to Editorial Policy." I think it is fine. It appears to me to distinguish so correctly between that form of deceit which compromises the truth when silence seems to give consent; and that offensive insistence which continually thrusts its peculiar views upon unwilling and irritated auditors in season and out.

CAN AN EDITOR POSSESS THE TRUTH?

Editor The Christian Century:

I have noted with interest your reply to Dr. Chilton's questions, particularly where you say: "But it is our purpose to carry the Truth into the practice of our local churches, etc." Now, Brother Morrison, after all is not this an assumption pure and simple? You do not suggest where or how you are going to get this truth. You do not suggest that you need any aid or guide. You do not suggest what shall be your standard of truth. Perhaps none of these are needed, but this is exactly what Mrs. Eddy thought too. She needed nothing except that self-hypotized state which put her in touch with God Almighty and made her his means of approach to the human mind, and now thousands of people get up (sic) to a knowledge of God via Mrs. Eddy.

What you say concerning your purpose to carry "the truth" into our practice is what every Christian Scientist is saying to you and to me. It is what every Mohammedan is willing to die for. The truth is what every Unitarian like Dr. Eliot of Harvard is urging upon every one of us. The truth is what Alexander Dowie wanted us all to accept. The truth is what Pastor Russell is so deeply concerned about and wishes the world to know and see. This is what every Methodist who "gets religion," while on his knees at a mourner's bench, wishes us to know. Again, there has never been a creed adopted as a test of fellowship but that its advocates urged that it was the truth. Again, who does not know that the Catholics urge exactly what you are urging, that all Protestants come to the truth. Of course they have this immense advantage: they settle the question as to what is truth.

THE SPIRITUAL AND THE CEREMONIAL.

Editor The Christian Century:

The Christian Century is a very welcome visitor to my study every week. Many happy hours have I spent in reading it even from cover to cover. Especially is that true as I think of the time that I have spent reading the editorials, because I often re-read them several times. I don't know when I have read anything that I have enjoyed more than the editorials of the last two issues, which dwell upon the deeper spiritual life of the Church. To my mind, if the divided Christendom is ever united, it will be because the individual members of the Church discern the spirit; because they possess the spirit of Christ; because they are one in Christ.

But, if I rightly understand your article in the last issue of your paper, it seems to me that you carry your argument too far when you say that "correct ordinances and sound creeds are not the basis for Christian union." Is it not a fact that obedience to Christ's commands is a spiritual matter? The ordinances, baptism and the Lord's Supper we understand were to be observed, and each have a spiritual significance: baptism (no matter in what form it is observed) having a spiritual content because Christ himself ordained it, and the Lord's Supper possessing a spiritual value because it is observed in memory of his death. The commands: "Love your neighbor as yourself" and, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," possess a spiritual value because they are things that Christ did himself. And such is true of the ordinances, baptism and the Lord's Supper.

When Jesus prayed that his followers might be one, even as he and the Father were one, does it not imply that they were one in action, aim and purpose? And, too, does he not wish his followers to be one in the same manner? Can they be such, other than by doing the things that Christ did, and observing what he commanded?

I do not believe in being creed bound. No church organization or ecclesiastical body has any strings strong enough to hold me bound to any creed, except the creed: "Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God;" neither do I expect to be limited by denominational lines. I strive to express a fraternal and catholic spirit toward every Christian of every creed—a spirit, which I believe will have to be cultivated by every Christian before we can reach any unity of practice. Therefore, I trust that the Disciples will cultivate this brotherly and fraternal spirit which will grow into a deeper spiritual life and which will strengthen the bonds of unity.

Praying that you may be richly blessed in your labors and that The Christian Century, because of its imperative need may grow into larger usefulness of the kingdom. I remain,

Frank C. Ransdell.
Hemlock, Ohio.

[Obedience to the commands of Jesus is surely a spiritual matter, just as our correspondent affirms, but Jesus' commands do not concern themselves with matters of "correctness" and "soundness." It is quite possible to be both "correct" and "sound" and at the same time un-Christian and unspiritual.—The Editor.]

Disciples Table Talk

Four Years in Los Angeles.

The fourth year of the pastor of First Church, Los Angeles, Cal., Russell F. Thrapp, began last Sunday, December 6th. During the last three years, nearly eight hundred people have been received into the membership. Every department of the church is prosperous. During the recent prohibition campaign in the state of California, the young people of this church were foremost in the city in promoting the campaign by getting in touch with all the people of the neighborhood and the members of the church. In the vote, also, which made an end of prize fighting in the state, and brought in the Red Light Abatement Act, they were leaders. Among the best things of which this church boasts, is the Bible School Orchestra of twenty pieces, which now has a reputation of being the best in the city.

Progress at Hiram College.

Within the last month Hiram College has received $87,000 from the estate of the late H. R. Newcomb, This is the largest single gift in the history of the college. Mr. Newcomb was an early Hiram student under Pres. Garfield. There is increased interest this year in the Mission Study class. J. E. Pounds, minister of the Hiram church, is leading the class in a series of studies on the Yellow Race. Nearly 200 are enrolled in the class. The vigor of the work in the Biblical department at Hiram is indicated by the numbers enrolled in the various classes. In the several lines of Bible studies and Christian service 150 young men and women are enrolled.

A Memorial Building Nears Completion.

The J. B. and Mary Atkins Memorial Hall, with an auditorium seating fifteen hundred persons, is one outgrowth of the $100,000 bequest left Linwood Blvd. Church of Kansas City, on Mrs. Atkins' death three years ago. The memorial hall fronts on Forest Avenue, with the church proper on the north, fronting on Linwood Boulevard. The cost of the Atkins Hall is about $60,000. In size it is 70 by 120 feet. J. C. Hill, chairman of the building committee, says the dedication probably will take place early in January. Colonel Atkins was one of the early members of the First Christian Church and Mrs. Atkins died a member of that church. The gift to the Linwood church was largely an expression of regard for Dr. Burris A. Jenkins, its pastor, a family friend and a namesake of Colonel Atkins. The Atkins Hall will be an extensive addition to the Sunday-school quarters of the church, provision being made for twenty classrooms under the gallery. The auditorium has a seating capacity of four hundred in excess of the church proper. In the past, especially at lectures, persons have been turned away from the church because of the limited capacity. The new hall was designed by Henry F. Hoit, the architect of the church proper.

Sorority Girls Work on Thanksgiving.

Two hundred sorority girls, and others, gave up their trips home on Thanksgiving Day to work in the Ann Arbor church in sewing garments for the Belgian children. These girls are students in the state university. Two boxes have already been packed and sent to New York. One box contained 400 and the other 481 suits and dresses for the Belgian children, and several pounds of yarn for the Belgian grandmothers who have asked for yarn and needles to knit for their unfortunate ones.

Church Appreciates Pastor's Evangelism.

The meeting in Winfield, Kans., church which was held by the pastor, R. W. Gentry, closed recently and the members of the church were so pleased with the results that they presented their pastor with a purse of eighty dollars in gold. There were 46 additions and many of them were middle-aged business men of the city whose influence will count mightily for the church in the future. The church now has five hundred members and there is every prospect of a fine development through the coming years.

Pastors Exchange Meetings.

Andrew Scott of Hoopeston, Ill., and Arthur I. Zeller of Chicago Heights, arranged this fall for an exchange of evangelistic service. The meeting at Hoopeston has already been noted in these columns. Mr. Scott recently closed his work at Chicago Heights with forty additions in ten days of preaching, 35 of them by confession of faith.

Has Thirteen Calls.

The number thirteen is regarded as "lucky" rather than otherwise by the Hiseyville church at Glasgow, Ky., and the minister, J. C. Hall. The minister has been called for the thirteenth year of service with this church and neither he nor the church have any anticipations of anything but the very best of "luck" from this action.

Rev. R. F. Thrapp, who has received eight hundred people into the fellowship of First Church, Los Angeles, in the last three years.

Returns After Twenty Years.

Harry D. Smith, who goes to Dallas, Tex., from Hopkinsville, Ky., is returning to the city of Dallas after twenty years. He spoke in the same pulpit twenty years ago when he was first on a national convention program. Mrs. Smith and their son are at Eureka Springs, Ark., but will soon arrive at Dallas.

"Our Minister's Honeymoon."

The young people of the West Side church of Kansas City recently gave a dramatic entertainment called "Our Minister's Honeymoon." The proceeds of the entertainment were given to the church.

Hiram Church Raises Money.

For many years the Hiram church has been a regular, and for its numbers and means, an exceptionally liberal contributor to all the missionary enterprises. Hiram can contribute to the "Men and Millions" campaign only her young men and women. But it was felt by the leaders that a really serious effort should be made to enlarge the offerings. Some weeks ago the church adopted the "every-member canvass" with a budget of $800. That was considerably above any previous record and more than was asked of the church. A canvassing committee of over forty was selected and responded with rare unanimity and hearty good will. Several meetings of the committee were held for prayer and organization of the work. On Sunday, Nov. 22, from 2:30 to 5:00 the canvass was made. The people responded as freely as the committee had done with a total of over $1,200. There was no urgency save the urgency of a deep and widespread interest. Students, many of whom are working their own way through college, pledged over $200. It was beautifully done.

Turkey Dinner for Forty Years.

The Ladies' Aid at Eureka, Ill., has given a turkey dinner at the church on Thanksgiving every year for forty years. The one this year was largely attended. The Eureka college foot-ball team played the Canton College team on Thanksgiving with a score of 37 to 0 in favor of Eureka. The Eureka basket ball team is reported as being very strong this year.

Hunt Money in Church Homes.

The church at Columbia, Mo., will observe the "Every-Member Canvass" on Nov 29. All the money needed for the church will be secured in one day except the support for the living link missionary, Dr. Jennie Fleming.

Beckley, W. Va., Living Link.

The New River District of W. Virginia is composed of Fayette and Raleigh counties, with the Beckley church and the churches at Montgomery, Grande View, Warden, Mt. Hope and some others, being the principal churches in the district. The Beckley church has recently decided to be a living life church in home missions, and has arranged with the State Board that their missionary shall do work in Fayette and Raleigh counties. This missionary is Charles Reinhard, who is located for half of his time at Montgomery, West Virginia; the other half of his time is spent in doing evangelistic work in this district. He has held meetings at Warden, Mt. Hope and Montgomery. The meeting at Warden resulted in the organization of a church of seventy members, forty-four were confessions, four came from another body, and twenty-two reclaimed. Besides these there were six others who came during the brief preaching service, later, making a total of seventy-six. The church at Mt. Hope was materially strengthened in its spirit and work. The church at Montgomery had sixty-three added to its membership.

The Sunday before Christmas is the regular day for the presentation of this work. Whether the offering is made that day or in weekly payments following the Every-Member Canvass, it is important that this, as all the missionary days, be used for education.

Community Helps Manage Church Activities.

The church at Danville, Ind., has dedicated a great building with numerous institutional features. The building was given to the church by Edgar W. Shirley but he required that they raise an endowment fund of ten thousand dollars and continue to provide the pastor's salary. The church has raised the required endowment and hopes to increase it later to twenty-five thousand dollars. The management of the institutional features of the church is vested in a Board of Control which is selected every year by the Official Board of the church. This Board of Control has two members from the Disciples church, two from other churches of the town, and one who does not have a church organization in the immediate community. The institutional work is conceived as being for the benefit of all the churches of the community. This great building cost $41,000. The building committee was Judge John V. Hadley, W. E. Compton Heights church of St. Louis has been burdened by a white elephant of debt for these many years. On a recent Sunday, the congregation pledged five thousand dollars to pay off the incumbrance. It is eleven years since this obligation was contracted.

Pastor Will Hold Revival.

E. W. Cole, the successful pastor at Huntington, Ind., is going to hold a revival in his own church, beginning Jan. 1. He will be assisted by W. E. M. Hackleman of Indianapolis, who will lead the music.

Church Host to Chamber of Commerce.

The Chamber of Commerce held a banquet recently in the Disciples' church at Parsons, Kans. Over 100 plates were laid and the dinner was served in a very fine way by the ladies of the church. The visiting body had a very interesting program of toasts.

L. O. Bricker Dines with Friars.

The Friars are a social and literary organization in Atlanta, Ga., and on a recent evening they had as guest of honor Rev. R. A. Webb, a professor in Louisville Theological Seminary. On the same evening L. O. Bricker of our First Church was also an honored guest.

Church Uses Movies.

Moving pictures were introduced at our church in Rocky Ford, Colo., November 8, and the innovation proved a decided success. Mr. Dugan, the pastor, delivered an address preceding the pictures, on the subject, "The Things that Endure." The pictures were on the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Western Disciples Meet.

The Spokane district of Washington state Disciples met in convention the week before Thanksgiving. There were a hundred out-of-town delegates, and the meeting was held in Pacific Avenue Church at Spokane. Among those who spoke were F. E. Billington, A. L. Young and Mrs. I. N. McCash.

Dr. Jenkins Talks on Art.

An addition to the art treasures of Kansas City was made recently in the statue of Carl Busch. It was unveiled at the Atheneum Auditorium, November 17. The presentation speech was made by Dr. Burris A. Jenkins of the Linwood Boulevard church.

No Book Should Be Expurged.

Allan B. Philputt spoke on November 29 on "Paul's Swan Song." Among other things, he remarked that if he were addressing an assemblage of ministers, he would tell them to put no book on the index expurgatorius. He said pastors should read all views but that the expounding of the doctrine and the broadening of one's viewpoint are different things.

Robbed on Road Home From Church.

Isaac Fenn, an old soldier eighty years old, was robbed while on the way home from revival services in the church at Olathe, Kans. The robbers missed a wallet in which he had fifty dollars in gold.

Building at Carlock, Ill.

One of the handsomest churches in McLean County, Ill., outside of Bloomington, is being built at Carlock by the Disciples. It is to cost $10,000 in addition to the donated labor put on the building. The structure is now ready for the plasterers and will be completed by December 20.

W. H. Allen Has Vacation Lengthened.

William Huddleston Allen, who is on a leave of absence from Swanson St. Church in Melbourne, Australia, has been granted an additional six months' leave of absence. This action has been taken because of the danger of travel in war times. He will conduct revival services at Lexington, Ky., where he formerly preached.

Carries Church Bulletins to Homes.

Third church, Indianapolis, has visitors carry the church bulletin into homes where the members are not going to church. By this means those who are indifferent or discouraged are brought back into the fellowship and there are no church bulletins wasted. T. W. Grafton is pastor.

In and Around Chicago

After several weeks of anxiety, in which no news had come from Brazil, letters from Herbert L. Willett, Jr., of Chicago arrived last week. He reports that it is impossible to write anything more than formal reports of the situation, as all the foreign postoffices have been closed, and only the Turkish post is doing business. Furthermore, all outgoing letters must be written in French and left unsealed. The Syrian Protestant College is going on with its work though many of the native teachers and older students have been drafted to the army. The U. S. battleship "North Carolina" is in the harbor of Beirut and no immediate trouble is anticipated. Funds for the pressing needs of the college were secured through the efforts of Ambassador Morganthau, and were furnished by the Asiatic office of the Standard Oil Company. Cable dispatches since the posting of the letters state that the Turkish government has levied a tax of $20,000 on the college. President Bliss offered to give $5,000, and the offer was rejected. What steps may be taken to collect the sum demanded are not known. Communication is very slow and uncertain as all lines of steamships have been discontinued, and the government has refused to permit other than official business over the cables. Mr. Willett says the only thing to do is to wait for further communications, and not to worry.

Mr. H. L. Willett, Jr., teacher in Syrian Protestant College, Beirut, Syria, who writes that no immediate trouble is anticipated there from the war.

A. T. Campbell, who served in days gone by as pastor at Monroe Street church, and at Metropolitan church, went into the work of conducting playgrounds. His first appointment in this service in Chicago was at Palmer Park. He has been in Boston in Playground work for a year, but has recently returned to Chicago to the Palmer Park.

Austin church held its annual meeting on the evening of November 4. There have been 21 additions in this church since the first of November. The budget system has been adopted in the finances and the pastor's salary has been increased a hundred dollars. A. R. McQueen is pastor.

The Edgewater Church announces a change in its meeting place to Clifton Hall, 1136 Wilson avenue. They are having supply preaching from Sunday to Sunday and on December 6 will observe C. W. B. M. day.

Evanston church had a Thanksgiving cantata on the Sunday evening before Thanksgiving. They had a male chorus of 25 voices at the evening service on Dec. 6. The pastor preached on "A Man's Religion." This church has had a larger evening audience every week for six weeks.

There are two churches in Chicago that are in Living Link relationship with the C. W. B. M. These are Jackson Blvd., and Ashland Ave. The leading contributor to the Foreign Society the past year in Chicago was Hyde Park with over twelve hundred dollars of offering.

C. C. Morrison, E. S. Ames, and H. L. Willett have spoken recently in platform meetings in Hyde Park church and Evanston church, treating the subject of "The Mission of the Disciples of Christ." Large audiences have been at both services. Mr. Morrison called attention to the felt need for more vital religion in the churches. He described the mechanical and routine nature of much religious work, and pleaded for a first hand, vital experience. He pointed out that while the Disciples had sought to reinstate the apostolic doctrine, ordinances and life, they had often fallen short of their ideal. In many respects they had drifted rather unconsciously and had taken on from their religious neighbors a somewhat imitative type of experience without having lived through the struggles from which that experience arose. He expressed satisfaction with a strain of rationalistic thinking which has characterized the Disciples and felt that in many ways they are prepared to avail themselves of the results of modern religious scholarship and practical reforms.

Dr. Willett spoke of the Disciples as having always conceived the Kingdom of God as a progressive, developing social order. They have cherished the biblical notion of a series of covenants, the patriarchal, the Mosaic and the Christian. The great thing in the last is its spirit—the spirit of love and service. He implied that this spirit should carry the church still further into benevolent and redemptive activities. Just as foreign missions have heroically carried Christian ideals into remote lands, so the church is called on at home and abroad, as never before in history, to champion all social movements and experiments which embody the spirit of love and service. The Disciples, as an intensely practical people, have every incentive and opportunity, to work out such a social program in every community where they labor, and to aid such tasks everywhere.

Dr. Ames spoke of religion as an immediate, personal experience among the Disciples. Instead of viewing God as remote and difficult of access, they have regarded God as dealing in very simple, natural ways with men. They have believed the Bible to be a book to be read like any other book and to be understood by the same laws of language and reason. They have felt that a man became a Christian by a practical trust and allegiance toward Christ. The only confession of faith ever required for membership in any of their churches is that of practical confidence in Jesus. The question asked of a candidate means, "Do you believe in Jesus Christ and in His Way of Life, and do you earnestly desire to follow Him?" The communion service, as cherished by the Disciples throughout their history, is an illustration of the individual relation in which every one stands to God. Each person decides his own right to participate. It is between him and Christ. Yet all communicants are welded together in a close and vital union by this common act and by the emotions and ideals thus shared and acknowledged.

The speakers have been invited to visit other churches and give the same talks with a view to heartening the members and bringing to clearer consciousness the opportunities and responsibilities which all Disciples should recognize and share.

Headquarters During Exposition.

First church of Los Angeles announces that it will keep open house during the exposition season next year and that its building at the corner of Eleventh and Hope streets, which is down-town and near the hotels will furnish information to visitors. The building is receiving a new coat of paint and is being redecorated inside so it will be bright and clean for the visitors.

Russell F. Thrapp Federation Head.

The Federation of Churches of Los Angeles is a very active organization and promotes many forms of community activity. They have just held their annual election of officers and have unanimously chosen as their president, Russell F. Thrapp, pastor of the First Church. Aggressive plans are being formulated for the coming year.

St. Louis Churches Help Poor.

The churches of St. Louis are banded together in a Federation. The condition of the unemployed poor in that city this winter is particularly distressing. This federation has decided to raise $75,000. The plan is to assign to various religious bodies the money that falls to them to be raised. The assignment to the Disciple churches in St. Louis is twelve hundred dollars, which will be subdivided among the various congregations of this group.

Kentuckians Sympathize with Belgians.

The people in Kentucky sympathize with the Belgians in their distress enough to put down their cold cash. The Sunday-school at Flat Rock, Ky., made an offering of twenty-five dollars. Many organizations in the community joined in the giving.

Veteran Minister Called Higher.

John W. Lemons, one of the older ministers of the Disciples in Kentucky was taken with blood poisoning recently and died. He was in the civil war, serving in the Fortieth Kentucky infantry and was a member of the G. A. R. He was a great favorite among the people as is shown by the fact that he married more people in his own and adjoining counties than all the other ministers put together, during the past two years.

Church Has a Decision Week.

A series of meetings of just one week was held in November in the church at Midway, Ky. The pastor, T. S. Tinsley, did the preaching, and Ralph Hudspeth led the song services. The sermons of the series were grouped around the general theme of "The Cross."

Sunday-school Hears Cry of Belgians.

The banner collection of the town for the relief of the Belgians was taken by the Disciples at Langdon, Kans., where they were raising money to send flour. The remainder of the town gave $400 and the Sunday-school of the Disciples came near matching this amount for they had $302.60 when the money was all counted, given by 180 men, women and children who were present for the offering.

Holds a Sunday Night Revival.

I. J. Spencer at the Central church at Lexington, Ky., has announced a Sunday night revival. The meaning of this announcement is that the church will utilize the Sunday evening service for evangelistic purposes. There have been additions every evening since the plan was inaugurated.

Leaves Church Nine Times Larger.

C. E. Ames is leaving Mt. Vernon, Wash., after five years pastorate there. He is going to Phoenix, Ariz. It is stated that he found the church at Mt. Vernon with forty members and left it with 350. The building was also built during his ministry there. The results in this pastorate give promise of what may happen at Phoenix.

Men Give Banquet to Women.

The men and boys of the church at Jacksonville, Ill., are to give a banquet to the women and girls of the congregation in the near future. It is planned to serve a thousand people that evening and have a great social experience for the church.

Church Promotes Attendance.

The church at Pikeville, Ky., had a unique plan this fall to promote the attendance of the church. The men were arrayed against the women with reference to church and Sunday-school attendance. The congregation enjoyed the best attendance of its history. The losing group was to furnish a banquet. As might have been expected, the men lost, but gallantly did the proper thing under the circumstances.

Presbyterians Send Supplies to Disciples.

The Presbyterian church at Albion, N. Y., has heard of the good work done by the deaconess of the First Church in Rochester, Miss Dorothy Zangline, and they have sent 1,250 pounds of clothing and food supplies to be distributed in Rochester through the Disciple worker. The supplies were gotten at a Thanksgiving thank offering social.

"In Time of War Prepare for Peace"

This greatest of all wars fills all minds. Not only are there greater armies than ever before and more deadly weapons, but new modes of warfare in the air and under the sea. The paralyzing influence of war, also, is felt throughout the civilized world as never before. It is humanity's war.

Doubtless the United States as the greatest neutral power will have an important part in the final settlement, and it is none too early to begin the study of the underlying causes of war and of the conditions necessary to peace.

Cannot our classes do something to create an enlightened public opinion touching this whole subject? Note the studies for 1915 in Josiah Strong's magazine of social study

"The Gospel of the Kingdom"

The Disciples and their Spiritual Opportunity

THE MOST SIGNIFICANT AND FRUITFUL SERVICE TO WHICH THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST WERE HISTORICALLY CALLED REMAINS YET TO BE UNDERTAKEN BY THEM—THE SERVICE OF CONSTRUCTING AN ORDER OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE, THE INNER LIFE OF THE SOUL, RICHER AND MORE CATHOLIC THAN THE CHURCH TODAY POSSESSES.

Though historically neglectful of this aspect of their mission, the signs of this present day and hour indicate both that the Disciples stand in the presence of an unprecedented opportunity to render such a service and that they are disposed, in becoming humility and faith, to undertake it.

The spiritual life of mankind will in less than a generation —perhaps in one decade—undergo a reconstruction more radical, more profound, and more fruitful of results in all departments of human activity, than it has experienced in many centuries. We need not wait fifty years to have the historian inform us that it did take place. If we have an eye whereby to discern the signs of the times we can see it taking place right now. The present war, itself a tremendous factor in this process of reconstructing the inner life of men, has also revealed and released many other influences.

This reconstruction process constitutes the unprecedented opportunity which the Disciples today confront.

And their disposition to improve this opportunity is betokened by their wistful and unsatisfied—perhaps only semi-conscious—quest after an adequate spiritual life of their own, and a marked tendency to reinterpret their "plea" in terms of spiritual life rather than in terms of church organization.

This quest and this tendency give significance to the presence of the Disciples in the modern world.

With merely the older incomplete presentation of their plea, in terms of creed and ordinances, the Disciples seem out of place in the modern world. They are an anachronism.

Much that they contended for a half-century and more ago has been virtually accepted by the Church of today. Denominational practices are not so distinctive and exclusive and sectarian as they were then. To continue harping on creed and ordinances not only elicits no response from the minds of modern men, but feels forced and strained, and more or less fictitious, to the Disciples themselves. So that, as a matter of fact, the interest of Disciple churches and ministers is nowadays directed toward the truths and enterprises shared in common by the whole Church of Christ.

The effect of all this on the minds of the Disciples themselves is to divide them into four classes.

There are first those who are striving to galvanize the old formulas into life, to sharpen the edge of the old watchwords and to bring condemnation down upon the heads of those who are charged with turning away from "the faith once delivered."

The frenzied violence of this class is the surest betrayal of their conscious impotence.

The second class consists of those who have subconsciously given up any distinctive mission that the Disciples may have imagined themselves called to accomplish, who see the remoteness of the dissolution of the denominational order and who feel especially the pride of numerical and organizational strength to which the Disciples have attained. They therefore conceive the place of the Disciples in the religious world as that of merely a denomination co-ordinate with other denominations in the denominational order, embodying certain practices and truths which the rest have neglected, just as each of the sects embodies certain practices and truths which the others have neglected. The function of the Disciples, under this conception, is to be as decent and respectable and co-operative a denomination as their "distinctive principles" and their "denominational interests" will allow. The immediate duty of practicing Christian unity has been obscured and confused for them by schemes of Federation and Commissions appointed to carry on diplomatic negotiations with other denominations looking toward the "far-off divine event" of a united Church.

To this second class the majority of the Disciples today belong, led by men of sincere purpose, of holy and unselfish lives, to honor whom is the delight of all right-minded brethren.

The complacent and proud acceptance of a denominational status for the Disciples by the majority of our people is the most pathetic aspect of the situation in which the Disciples' movement today finds itself.

Class two is a menace to our historic ideals immeasurably more serious than class one. Class one is ignorant and bumptious. It thrives on prejudice. It sustains its life on words.

But class two carries a dead passion in its heart. The high enterprise on which our fathers embarked is impracticable—impracticable for us, now, in this generation, in these ten thousand churches that have been established under its mighty impulse. For the spokesmen of class two no interpretative word is so adequate as that of Jesus when he exclaimed, "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

The third class exists, in a sense, within the second class. Those described under class two have but subconsciously abandoned the illusion of a distinctive mission for the Disciples, radical and comprehensive in its nature and to be realized here and now. But class three have consciously abandoned it. And they reason, naturally, that it is not quite rational to hold oneself loyal to the Disciples in the face of inconvenience and self-sacrifice when better professional prospects or more convenient and comfortable circumstances call one into the ministry or membership of one of the "other denominations."

Hence we find scores and scores of young Disciple ministerial students, especially in the eastern seminaries, leaking away, unperceived, from the Disciples' "denomination" into the ministry of "another denomination." They belong to class three.

And we find in many great cities of our land thousands upon thousands of Disciples who have either already identified themselves with the Christian denominations or whose connection with a congregation of Disciples is quite casual and perfunctory and in imminent likelihood of being severed. These also belong to class three.

"One denomination is as good as another," is the latitudinarian self-justification of class three for pulling up the roots of their loyalties from Disciple soil and planting them elsewhere. From the standpoint of class two the apothegm of class three is pretty difficult to gainsay.

There is a fourth class of minds among the Disciples, just emerging into a consciousness of one another, to whom the situation presents itself as a spiritual problem and opportunity. They have striven with open and earnest heart to understand the soul of Thomas Campbell and they believe that his dominant impulse was directed toward a spiritual goal. They believe that the fundamental principles of the Disciples are spiritual principles.

They declare that the Disciples cannot become a denomination, a "religious body" co-ordinate with other religious bodies in the denominational order, without violating the purposes for which they were born.

They believe that the continued preaching of creed and ordinances, while it has its important place, will have no appreciable effect this side of doomsday upon the dissolution of the denominational order.

Denominationalism is an unspiritual, a carnal, thing. It can be overcome only by an undenominational brotherhood of spiritual men who practice the unity of the spirit in a higher order of life, of inner spiritual life, richer and more catholic than the Church now possesses.

They believe that the Disciples are called to no less a work than this; that they are equipped with the principles and the passion for it; that the times make singularly propitious the present undertaking of it; and that the tokens of their willingness to pay the price of such a mission are many and heartening.

A Social Survey of Springfield, Ill.

BY FRANK WALLER ALLEN.

TO HAVE good Samaritans in the city streets is splendid, but to make the streets secure places in which to live is better. It is a great heart that binds up wounds, but it is a trifle bitter to be "a certain man," and get beaten up. Without discouraging Samaritans, a better way is to eliminate the causes of robbery on Jericho roads. Herein lies the difference between benevolence and conscious conscientious collective action. And this is what the people of Springfield, Ill., have been doing in the past few months, and what they are planning to do in the coming years.

The most extensive social survey taken in any American city has just been completed at Springfield, with a ten days' exhibit in the State Armory. Springfield is an all-American city in the heart of the Middle West. For the population, only 6 per cent of which is foreign, numbers 60,000: the interests are chiefly agricultural, while the pioneer settlers were from Virginia and Kentucky with a smaller number of New Englanders. It is a southern city in Yankeedom with the pride and conservatism of the South, touched by the idealism of old Massachusetts.

A MUNICIPAL DIAGNOSIS.

The social survey bears the same relations to the modern city that a diagnostician's examination bears to his patient. It is the search by experts for the causes of disease in the civic body. The average man is conscious that any ill condition in his health is produced by the failure of some organ within his body to functionate properly. He rarely if ever has the ability to locate the seat of the disease for himself. And it is certainly no lack of self-esteem, but on the other hand good common sense, for him to hasten to a physician for an examination. Now it is not the business of the diagnostician to point out wherein his health is normal as much as it is to tell him the causes of the disease. After learning the nature of the trouble it is time to seek a cure. In the social survey, experts seek to know the conditions under which the people are living and wherein these conditions are not compatible with normal life. The facts are pointed out, the causes noted, and cures are suggested.

Consequently it is easily seen that there is nothing which shows quite so clearly the relation of social idealism to the church as the survey. It is not to be denied that in an atmosphere of sunshine, fresh air, health and economic security, religion has an opportunity that is unknown where lurks disease, crime, poverty and fear. Sin is a disease—frequently of the body and of the mind—too often caused by a vicious environment. The survey seeks the causes of environmental viciousness and suggests the way to wholesomeness.

Rev. Frank Waller Allen.

DEPARTMENTS OF CITY INVESTIGATED.

Some months ago patriotic citizens, under the direction of the Russell Sage Foundation of New York City, began such an investigation of conditions in Springfield. The investigations were made by experts who have done their work with scientific accuracy and impartiality. The survey was financed by both the citizens and the foundation at a cost of about $15,000. The conditions of the following manifestations of civic life were surveyed:

The public school system, recreation, city and county administration, charities, industrial conditions, public health, the correctional system, mental deficiency and alcoholism, and housing.

Three methods are being utilized to get the information obtained before the people. The reports are being printed in book form to be sold at a nominal price to cover the expense. Some of the most important parts of the reports have been, and are being, featured as news in the Springfield daily papers. The most important, however, is the publicity given through the exhibit held in the State Armory. Here the conditions unearthed by the experts were visualized. In the first place through the means of some thirty-five or forty booths, in each of which was a trained explainer, the findings of the experts were placed on large panels and in such concise and epigrammatic form as to be easily understood and remembered by the reader. These panels were also illustrated by photographs, cartoons and diagrams. In many instances the models were moving, in others the facts were dramatized by children trained to take the parts. Again models were made to a scale so that the impression of reality brought home the lesson with marked emphasis. Also moving pictures were used for the purpose of dramatizing conditions. In the ten days of the exhibit at least twenty to twenty-five thousand people saw their city as they had never seen it before. As a result of it all the city of Springfield will undergo a complete change of conditions within the next eight to ten years. Already the superintendent of schools is planning to adopt many of the measures suggested by the foundation. There is no question that "Old Father Springfield," now aware of the cause of his aches and pains, will begin to live the life which will give him a more perfect health.

SPRINGFIELD'S INDUSTRY.

The industrial survey was of unusual interest. A startling panel pointed out the American standards of living.

A DECENT HOME, NO LODGERS, NO CHILD LABOR, CHILDREN UNDER SIXTEEN IN SCHOOL, NO WAGE-EARNING MOTHER, SELF SUPPORT.

Then a companion panel gave the standards of 100 Springfield workers' families, examined by the experts, as follows:

"Thirty did not have decent homes, thirteen took in lodgers, six had children under fourteen at work, seventeen could not support children over fourteen in school, twenty-six mothers were at work, nine had received charitable aid."

Altogether sixty out of the one hundred families did not meet all the American standards.

Another panel pointed out the hours of labor of the workers in seventy-two manufacturing establishments, as follows: 1,368 employees were working ten hours a day; fifty-two were working nine and one-half hours a day; 1,981 or fifty per cent were working nine hours a day; seventy-five or only two per cent of the entire number of workers, were working eight and one-half hours a day. It was pointed out that the women workers of Springfield were employed ten hours a day in laundries, shoe factories and in stores on Saturday, nine hours a day in the watch factories, meter works and stores (except Saturday), and seven days a week in telephone exchanges, hotels and restaurants.

The following conditions were discovered upon the examination of one hundred families in reference to their income: thirty-five per cent of the men earned less than $2 a day; forty-seven per cent had irregular work; seventy per cent of the women earned less than one dollar and twenty-five cents a day and twenty-three per cent of them had irregular work. Girls found working in some stores at four dollars a week.

LENIENCY OF POLICE.

The following panel shows the value of a right correctional system.

HOW PRISONERS LEAVE JAIL:

Weakened by idleness.
Liquor and drug habits retained.
Probably penniless.

Freed from alcohol and drugs by the "cure."

In discussing the saloon policy, the use of drugs, gambling and vice, the report says: "In the enforcement of laws covering these things the police have generally shown a policy of great leniency." After reviewing the result of last spring's local option election which favored the retention of saloons, one report points out that in some sections there are as many as six saloons in one block and says such a number is totally unnecessary and only results in the development of the saloons of the low grade. "Springfield may want saloons," the report says, "but the city does not want drunkards or confirmed alcoholics."

THE PEOPLE'S HEALTH.

In the department of public health it is pointed out that of every ten babies born in Springfield, one dies before the age of one year of some preventable disease. One-third of these die because of improper care and feeding. They could be saved by employing public health nurses to instruct mothers. Under the head of mental hygiene it is emphasized that about seventy delinquent children are brought before the Juvenile Court annually. But no investigation is made of the family history of children suspected to be mentally deficient. Mental defectives are usually ten times as frequent among delinquent children as school children. Some mental defectives are never sent to school. A few are excluded from school. Nothing is being done for these children. Nothing is being done in schools to detect abnormal mental conditions. Nothing for special training of the mentally defective.

In the departments of recreation and schools the value of social centers is strongly emphasized. A model school made to the scale first shows the building as it exists during one-sixth of the year, completely empty and idle. The turning of an electric button shows this same school room filled with men and women meeting for the various purposes which have to do with the social welfare of the community.

"In the movie you look on life," says the report, "at the social center you yourself live." "During one-sixth of the year Springfield's one million dollar school plant renders no service to its owners."

"Dividends from the large capital invested in parks consist in their enjoyment by the people. Bigger dividends will come from promoting the use of Springfield park facilities. Parks need play engineers as well as civil engineers."

Under the head of Springfield's theatrical offerings the report states, "During two months last spring four hundred and one performances took place in the four theaters. Four of these were straight dramas. The stage is either a moral or an immoral force."

As a whole the weaknesses in the civic life in the city of Springfield have been brought home to the citizens in a manner which will be productive of unusual good. The survey was led by the best and highest type of citizenship. Already measures are being taken to cure many of the diseases which this diagnosis has discovered. Some organization will be formed within the immediate future which will have as its purpose the effecting of the cures suggested by the experts of the Russell Sage Foundation.

"The New Crusade"

A Ringing Call for the Enlistment of Youth in Christ's Army.

BY J. N. JESSUP.

FOR two years there has been blazoned at the forefront of our Sunday-school enterprise this sounding watchword, "A New Crusade; 500,000 souls for Christ through Sunday-school evangelism." It is an appealing motto. It is a call to be reckoned with. It is the declaration of a great opportunity. It is a call to lofty duty. It makes its appeal to the noblest sentiment that ever stirred the Christian breast—conquest, conquest for our King.

Mobilization is the great word today in the military world. Would that it were employed in a better cause than that of slaughtering one's fellow men! Millions of men are filling up the ranks of the volunteers at the call of king's craft, to yield up their lives a willing offering for country. Surely the Church will not be outdone by those who fight in secular interests.

Mobilization, organization, evangelization—these are the watchwords of the hour.

The "Crusade" of the twelfth century has lent its name and inspirational value to many a cause good and bad, but never to one more worthy of our highest endeavor, even to the point of great sacrifices, than the one represented in this "New Crusade."

A CRUSADE OF A NEW SORT.

We have heard of the crusades of the olden time, of that feverish era when the Church, borne on by the passionate appeals of a hermit, and intoxicated with his spirit, went forth to rescue the sepulchre from the hands of the false prophet. What we need today is the spirit of that crusade; not its spectacular features, not its trumpet blare and the gleam and glint of sword and shield; not that, but its tremendous earnestness, its willingness to suffer, its magnificent faith and daring, its enthronement of duty, and its impelling cry, "It is God's will! It is God's will!" Given this spirit, and the 500,000 converts will be forthcoming.

A new crusade implies that past efforts have not been wholly successful. It is a reminder that the war is not over. The sepulchre is yet in the hands of the false prophet. Thousands yet need to be recruited in the army of the King who are now doing service in the ranks of the world.

Five hundred thousand in five years is a perfectly feasible proposition. It is not an idle dream. It is not a house of cards. We will mobilize; we will organize; we will evangelize; we will have our five hundred thousand.

We will mobilize. We will call every man to the colors. We will supply him with modern weapons of warfare. We will assign him a point of contact with the enemy. We will strengthen the base of our operations. In other words we will rally all our Sunday-school hosts. We will, first of all, give to the Sunday school the recognition it ought to have and make it what it ought to be.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL SPELLS OPPORTUNITY.

The Sunday-school is the biggest thing, the most potential thing, in the church life today. The Sunday-school has been "launched" for many years, but, "Whither bound?" Are we to forever and forever hug the shore as did sailing vessels before the days of Columbus, or sail out on new seas of wondrous discovery and power? Good work has been accomplished, is being accomplished all the while, but it is too meager commensurate with the possibilities. The great ship, capable of sailing the boundless main, is lying in-shore, and only meagerly fulfilling the purpose that was in the mind of the Master-builder.

This great organization with its vast

Rev. J. N. Jessup, who says that Sunday-school Evangelism yields the quickest returns on the thought and energy invested.

constituency, has but one aim, to win souls to Christ and train them in Christian life and service. It has a right to demand something more than a passing consideration from every Christian. It must be better understood even in this day. It is in every way worthy of the best brain and brawn and genius and consecration of the church.

We will mobilize this great army, and then we will direct each unit to the point of contact. We will assign each school to a definite task. The task distributed, the consummation will be easy. It can be done. Will it be done?

Sunday-school evangelism is an evangelism sure, swift, and dignified.

No work in which the church can engage is so absolutely sure of success. About 85 per cent of all who enter the Church enter through the Sunday-school.

ADVANTAGES OF SUNDAY-SCHOOL EVANGELISM.

Sunday-school evangelism is not only sure, but it is swift. It yields quickest return on thought and energy invested. Rally day, properly conducted and followed up, will yield fine fruitage. Decision day, well planned, looked forward to, prayed for, will pour a golden harvest of youth into the lap of the Church. If you will excuse the expression, the church can most surely and quickly have a "bumper crop" by giving its strength to the work of the Sunday-school.

Sunday-school evangelism is not only sure and swift, but, best of all, it is dignified. It is sane. It is normal. Modern revival methods are not always sane, not always normal, frequently undignified. I do not believe God meant His church to increase by the "high pressure" methods. It could be said of some revival methods "it is a scream."

The traditional "exhortation" at the close of each sermon is not always fruitful, and may become very tiresome. Well do I remember in my childhood that, when the preacher lowered his voice from its topmost pitch, closed the Bible and stepped down in front of the pulpit and delivered the impassioned "exhortation," then it was time for me to wake up, for the sermon was about done and the services about over. We have kept up the exhortation with commendable faithfulness. I cannot believe that God intended his church to be recruited by the begging process. It is too much like conscript soldiers. People are begged, coaxed, cried, joked, tweedled, sometimes flim-flammed into the Church. It lowers the dignity of the Church. That such methods seem necessary shows that we have missed the mark. Somehow we have gone at it wrong. It is distasteful to cultured souls, and it must be to Christ.

WHERE THE REVIVAL IS JUSTIFIED.

Understand, there are times when the impassioned invitation is not out of place: in the intense atmosphere of a revival service, when the situation is electric with expectancy, when many are halting, then it is both right and normal to go on exhorting them to be saved, as Peter on the day of Pentecost: "With many other words did he exhort them saying, save yourself from this crooked generation." Then it is right and not undignified; indeed, how can a man help it who feels the burden of souls upon his heart? Any impassioned utterance or pleading is justified in a revival meeting, except when one races up and down the aisles, jumps over seats, and turns hair-raising somersaults. But as an every-day business the traditional exhortation is unnecessary. The Sunday-school is the natural, normal and dignified way; and I believe it is the way that was intended.

Reaching thousands of children in the Sunday-school, by that same process hundreds of parents will be reached. There is no more direct road to a parent's heart than through the child. "A little child shall lead them." The school that brings parents and child together in the kingdom of God is doing the Master's will and work.

We are all the time studying how to reach men. Consider the child. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred you can reach the man you seek quicker through the child than in any other way known to human effort. The man may be hardened in sin, absorbed in business, but he is one out of ten thousand if he is not concerned in the moral and religious development of his child.

A mother sat on the bedside with her sick boy. The mother heart was glad because she thought the disease had fled and safety was assured. But it was the prelude to the end, for the home was soon to lose this little mother's joy. They were talking lovingly to each other, as only a boy and his mother can talk, when the dear little fellow said, as he clasped his mother about the neck with his thin arms, "Oh, you are just a boy's mother."

THE CHURCH AND THE CHILDREN.

That is what the church must be to the children—just a great, loving, tender, motherly mother. The changeless beauty that glows on the canvas of Benjamin West was put there by the kiss of his mother, for it was the pressure of her sweet Quaker face that inspired him with a genius that has made his art glorious in all the proud galleries of the world.

In the stormful period of the French Revolution, one of that nation's most gifted and patriotic sons was looking out from behind prison bars, expecting every moment to hear the rattle of the death wagon, and see and feel the flashing knife of the guillotine; but in that terrible situation he uttered this wonderful word, "Even in this incomprehensible moment, when mortality, enlightenment, love of country, all of them only make death at the prison door or on the scaffold more certain, yes, on the fatal tumbril itself, with nothing free but my voice, I would still cry 'take care' to a child who should come too near the wheel. Perhaps I may save his life; perhaps he may some day save France."

In the old State House in Philadelphia, around which gather so many memories of the birth of our freedom, and filled with Revolutionary relics, there is the headless shell of an old drum. Above it you may read the words, "This drum was beaten at the battle of Germantown in 1777, by John Shoemaker, aged twelve." Men may load and fire the great guns and bombard the strong fortresses, but boys have held the drumsticks, and have given the beat of the furious charge that has sent men to battle and to victory.

When William the Conqueror sailed from the shores of France to wrest the crown of England from Harold, the royal galley led the fleet. The figure-head on the prow of the galley was a golden boy, with arms outstretched, pointing the way to England and to victory. O Church of God, O Ship of Zion, put the living boy on the prow of thy proud craft, and that boy shall point the church to a militancy on earth that shall issue in the church triumphant.

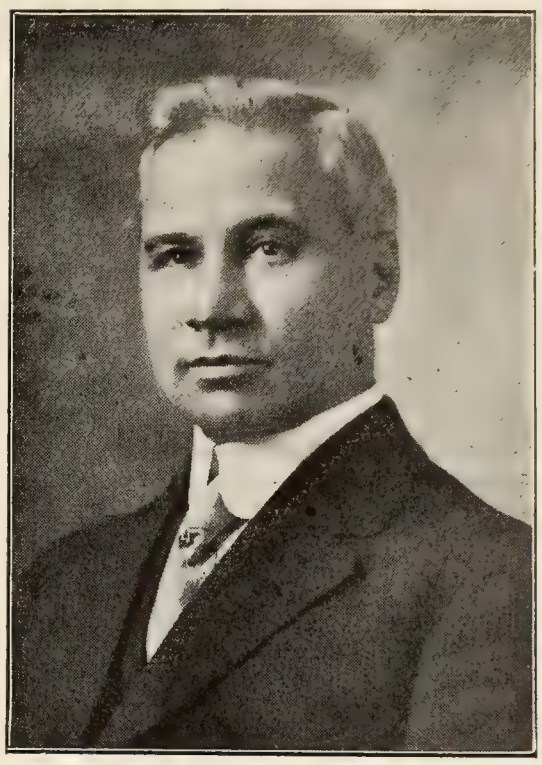
Retired Officers in Two Armies

How Uncle Sam and the Church Treat the Men Who Serve Them.

BY GEORGE A. MILLER.

IN THESE days when we are contemplating an adequate relief for the aged minister and his dependent ones it seemed to me it would be interesting for us to know how the United States government cares for those who have given the active part of their lives in service in the army or navy. As a concrete case is always more interesting than an abstract treatment of a subject I have interviewed one of the retired generals of the United States army now residing in the capital city.

General A. S. Daggett enlisted as a private in the 5th Maine Volunteers in 1861 at the age of 23 years. He was soon made a Lieutenant. He served with honor and distinction all through the Civil War and in 1866 was appointed to the regular army as Captain. His pay was simply the pay of the office and it is given in general figures as he, like all great men, is exceedingly modest and requested that as far as possible I should leave him personally out of the article that I might write.



Rev. George A. Miller.

THE GOVERNMENT'S LIBERALITY.

As a captain at that time in the service his pay was about $140 per month. Of course if he were disabled or sick he received all the care and treatment necessary free of any expense whatever. He was later appointed as Major and his salary was now $2,500 per year with an increase of 10 per cent for every five years he had been in the service up to 20 years. He was again promoted, this time to the office of lieutenant colonel at a salary of $3,000 plus the 40 per cent, he having then been more than 20 years in the service. This gave him a salary of $4,200. His next promotion was to the office of colonel at a slary of $3,500 plus the 40 per cent, but the salary of a regular colonel is not to in any case exceed $4,500. Later he was made a brigadier-general at a salary of $5,000 per year.

We see by this that an officer during the years of his active service is well cared for by our government. Very few ministers have continuous service without the loss of any time, with no medical or hospital bills, with no moving expenses and with the assurance of employment during life or good behavior.

I have written of the case of General Daggett because I have known him for several years as an ardent church man and a faithful member of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church of this city and especially as a great worker in the temperance cause. I have written also because during the Boxer uprising in China he was an officer of the relief expedition of the allied forces that hastened to the relief of Peking and was prominent in the attack that brought safety to the missionaries and others who were imprisoned within its walls.

But what provision was made for this good, faithful man when age should come upon him and he should be no longer able to do active service? Would he be compelled to support himself and family by attempting some labor for which his years of service and training had thoroughly unfitted him? Would he be compelled to live in want and without the comforts that should rightly come to age and a well-spent life? The government of the United States does not treat the leaders of its forces and those who have borne the burdens of active service in that way.

At the age of 64 he was retired. This is compulsory and an officer either of the Army or Navy reaching this age must be retired from the active service. He may be called upon to do some clerical or executive service, in case of stress or need, but in general he spends the remaining days of his life without labor. But can he spend them in comfort? He receives as compensation during life three-fourths of the regular salary he was receiving at the time of his retirement. In the case of General Daggett he receives an annual salary of $3,750. To a preacher this seems sufficient to procure a few luxuries above the actual necessities of life. He was retired on June 14, 1901. He has spent these years in Christian work and especially is he an earnest and active worker in the cause of temperance.

A PRESENT OPPORTUNITY.

Now the vital question to us is how shall the church treat those who have given the best of their lives to her service, receiving often but a mere pittance even when they were in their prime? Can the great Church of Christ afford to treat its aged and helpless leaders as paupers? No, far be it from any of us. May we this year have an offering from all our churches and may we give an amount that will show that we have received the spirit of the Christ child during this Christmas season.

As Little Children

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

AS LITTLE children playing along the wide seashore,
Gathering pearly shells, turning them o'er and o'er,
Tiring of each in turn but to seek a brighter one—
So play we, children all, till life's play hour is done.

As little children playing along the wide seashore,
Building their houses of sand where the wild waters roar,
Then, when the waves devour, crying out to the heedless deep—
So play we, children all, and are left on the shore to weep.

As little children playing along the wide seashore,
Launching their fragile barks freighted with precious store,
Tracing their wayward course till the waves their treasures spend—
So play we, children all, and shall unto the end.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

KEEP CHRISTMAS SIMPLE!

IT IS hard to imagine how anyone who might be expected to read The Christian Century would be guilty of making extravagant Christmas gifts in this year of want and sorrow. So it may be that this editorial is quite superfluous.

But there may be those whose ideas of extravagance are not well defined, and who are planning a Christmas that seems reasonable enough in view of the habits of past years but which, in view of the extraordinary condition this year, must be described as extravagant.

Christ's birthday will be honored best by utmost modesty and simplicity in gifts this year.

If our friends received from us a simple card with a sincere good wish and a word conveying the information that the money usually spent on their Christmas gifts is this year being given to the poor or to some cause in the Church or to the Red Cross, it would please them more than anything else we could do.

An expensive Christmas, an elaborate Christmas, borders on the unethical this year and certainly it altogether violates good taste.

In all the land there should be no Sunday-school celebration whose main or prominent feature is the giving of presents to the children. The children should in this year be given the higher joy of themselves giving to Christ and to his suffering little ones.

Keep Christmas simple, and keep it unselfish—this year at least!

STUDYING THE WAR IN SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

NO SUBJECT engrosses the public mind today as does the European war. Men and women alike discuss it. The newspapers are filled with little else. Every public address one hears, no matter where the speaker may begin or what his theme may be, soon or late gets around to the subject of the war.

Advertisers are capitalizing the war interest to call attention to their goods. Economists are calculating what the effect of the war will be on the relative precedence of the financial centers of the world, most of them predicting that New York will lead London and Berlin when the fight is over. Art no doubt will shift its habitat, and Fashion will speak with equal if not superior authority from some other throne than that long established in Paris.

The ethical and religious aspects of the war command the greatest attention. The moral feelings of mankind have been shocked. All the inhibitions—the well-developed sense of brotherhood, the organized Socialist movement, the self-interest of commerce, the restraining power of bankers—in which men had trusted, have broken down, and this war is launched with even greater facility than any war in history.

And the Church's influence did not inhibit war.

It is Christian nations that are slaying each other's citizens. Three Y. M. C. A. secretaries, colleagues in Christian work in Geneva, marched in three opposite directions to join opposing armies.

Catholics fight Catholics.

Christian Endeavorers fight Christian Endeavorers—and fight to kill!

What does all this mean for our religion? Has religion failed? Has the Church failed? Is Christ sufficient to the great task he set himself of bringing peace on earth and a reign of good will among men? If he is sufficient why have twenty centuries of his influence upon mankind eventuated in this hideous butchery?

You can't avoid hearing these questions. And not many of us can avoid asking them. The place to ask and to discuss them is in the Church itself, in mature Sunday-school classes especially.

By a stroke both of practical enterprise and genuine service Dr. Josiah Strong has reconstructed the entire program of the Gospel of the Kingdom magazine for next year, consecrating every one of its twelve issues to the study of the moral and religious aspects of the war.

We do not like to use these editorial pages for advertising the goods of the Disciples Publication Society, but it would seem that so obvious a blessing to adult and young people's classes should be passed around as generally as possible.

The advertisement of the Gospel of the Kingdom lesson program is found on another page.

Many a Sunday-school class will double its attendance next year by the use of this increasingly popular and now peculiarly timely series of studies.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY'S CHRISTMAS.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY cannot allow the Christmas day to approach without giving expression to its grateful appreciation of the good things that have recently come to it.

Since the Atlanta Convention our laymen friends through the Coöperation Committee have made it possible to very materially reduce our indebtedness. Some large and very generous gifts have been received in response to the Committee's call, and a larger number more modest in amount but equally generous and gracious.

In these pre-Christmas days our friends are remembering this cause with gifts which spring out of the season's sentiments.

For the spontaneity and heartiness of these benefactions the editors and the members of the Coöperation Committee are sincerely thankful.

Along with these expressions of gratuitous support the Disciples Publication Society is able to report an increase in its Sunday-school business for the autumn quarter of 35 per cent above the corresponding quarter of last year.

At this writing the business office reports that the orders for Sunday-school supplies for the winter quarter, which are now rapidly coming in, show more than a 60 per cent increase over the corresponding date of last year.

These gifts of our friends and the patronage of our churches and Sunday-schools bring to the office and to the hearts of all the workers in it the spirit of Christmas cheer.

THE MENDACITY OF WAR NEWS.

IT is a trite saying that no dependence can be placed upon newspaper reports. But it has taken the experience of these last weeks with the reports from the battle lines of Europe to put the proverb beyond the line of doubt.

It is doubtless natural that the accounts of hostilities, either of a political or military nature, are colored by the bias of partisan feelings. We expect optimistic forecasts from the leaders of campaigns.

But such motives can in no way explain or excuse the absolute and unvarnished falsehoods which day after day emanate from the press bureaus of the contending nations.

If one were to believe the German dispatches, there has been an unbroken series of advances on the part of their troops, varied only by slight retreats now and then which were merely in the nature of tactical movements. And the number of prisoners taken from the Russians, and from the Allies on the west front, if footed up would equal the total force in the field.

The Russians have been equally picturesque in their accounts. "Enormous" numbers of Germans and Austrians have been made prisoners, and the quantities of arms and equipment captured would have left their enemies without either men or munitions. If the English and French dispatches have avoided some measure of this extravagance, it is merely because the censorship has been so severely applied as to reduce all news to the most meager and unsatisfying quantity.

It is difficult to understand these misrepresentations of fact, either from the standpoint of ethics or of strategy. The moral effect of much of the war news is the creation of a depressing feeling that nobody wishes to tell the truth. And the folly of such procedure is apparent upon the reflection that the facts, good or bad, are a much more valuable asset to the war office than falsehood, and that they are certain to be known soon or later.

A CHRISTMAS ARMISTICE.

THE suggestion has been made repeatedly since the outbreak of the war that in case hostilities continued till the close of the year and beyond, an earnest effort be made to secure an armistice during the Christmas period.

There is a pathetic appropriateness in such a suggestion. If the conflict were between Christian and non-Christian peoples it would hardly be possible to plan such a pause. But because it is a war among Christian nations, it seems appropriate and possible!

The cynic and the scoffer will not fail to see the irony in this fact, and the so-called "heathen" nations will have their smile over it. This is but a small part of the burden Christianity has to bear as the result of the failure of its own exponents to bear witness in their lives and policies to the faith which they profess.

But it is to be hoped in all sincerity that the suggestion may be adopted. Sad and tragic as is the war, it would be still sadder and more tragic if the fight should still go on upon the day which twenty centuries have consecrated to the memory of the Prince of Peace and to the sentiment, "Peace on earth; good will to men."

Let us hope and pray that, whether by the entreaty of our government, or that of the neutral nations of Europe, or of the united Church, or the papal church, or some other expression of sentiment, the Christmas time may be marked by the ceasing of hostilities.

THE CHURCH AT OLD BETHANY.

ERECTED by the gifts of the many alumni and friends of Bethany College, the new church at Bethany, W. Va., is nearing completion. The committee, of which Pres. T. E. Cramblett, or to Miss Rebecca A. Richardson, Bethany, W. Va. need of fresh contributions in order to complete the work.

Bethany College has a unique place in the life and affections of Disciples. Increasingly it will be a shrine for pilgrimages by those who wish to visit the scenes of the founders of this movement. The old church which has stood for so many years on the banks of the Buffalo will be kept as a museum, and there are many objects of interest relating to Bethany and the Campbells which ought to find a secure resting place there.

If there are any friends who will contribute gifts, large or small, to the new church they can send their offerings to Pres. Chamblett, or to Miss Rebecca A. Richardson, Bethany, W. Va.

A WEAKENED PILLAR.

CHURCHMEN the nation over will hear with regret that William J. Bryan has taken the position in his "Commoner" that Prohibition is an issue that belongs to the states and not to national politics.

It will be difficult for the most ardent admirers of the Secretary of State to construe this newly announced attitude as disingenuous. It bears obviously upon its face the character of mere policy. No principle is brought forward by Mr. Bryan in justifying the position he has assumed. His distinction is a wholly artificial distinction, resting upon the purely arbitrary "ipsi dixit" of the man who makes it.

If Prohibition is good for states it is good for the United States. If the difficulties in the way of enforcing it in certain parts of the nation argue against making it a national law, the analogous difficulties in the way of enforcing it in certain parts of the states argue against making it a state law.

But even so the analogy is not quite fair, for the main difficulty in the way of full and adequate enforcement in the separate states inheres in the fact that neighboring states are still "wet," and that the traffic is yet tolerated by Federal authority.

Once outlaw the saloon from the nation and you have done away with the greatest difficulty in the way of absolute enforcement of Prohibition in the states.

Mr. Bryan's vehement attack upon the liquor traffic in his speech to Chicago Presbyterians two or three weeks ago will be bound to be interpreted, by others than partisans and cynics, as a deliberate plan to anticipate the resentment his contemplated announcement would call forth, cleverly providing a cushion to break the force of the protest he knew would come.

In a critical hour, when the Prohibition cause has at last gotten into the focus of national attention, Mr. Bryan's utterance will cost it a dozen or a score of precious votes in Congress.

For which unanticipated weakening of a supposed pillar in the temple Mr. Bryan's churchmen friends will find it hard to forgive him.

THE HEROIC NOTE.

PEOPLE respond to the call for heroism. They expect to hear it from their minister. They want him to ask them to do hard things. If he makes the Christian life too easy they suspect his own spiritual depth. Newspapers do not often sound the heroic note, but when they do they hear from it. Their readers say amen to the interpretations of Christianity that call for self-denial.

The Christian Century has fresh and impressive proof of this. The editorial series on the spiritual life, appearing on the opening page, was interrupted a few weeks ago with an appeal for Christ's churchmen to practice during this extraordinary year an economy of expenditures akin to that practiced by the ascetics, and to increase manifold their gifts to Christ's work at home and abroad.

We have received more expressions approving the sentiments of that editorial, from ministers, mission workers, laymen and women, than any article appearing in this paper in a long time has called forth.

THE QUESTIONER.

By Carl Werner.

I called the boy to my knee one day,
And I said: "You're just past four;
Will you laugh in that same lighthearted way
When you're turned, say, some thirty more?"
Then I thought of a past I'd fain erase—
More clouded skies than blue—
And I anxiously peered in his upturned face
For it seemed to say:
"Did you?"

I touched my lips to his tiny own
And I said to the boy: "Heigh, ho!
Those lips are as sweet as the hay new-mown;
Will you always keep them so?"
Then back from those years came a rakish song—
With a ribald jest or two—
And I gazed at the child who knew no wrong,
And I thought he asked:
"Did you?"

I looked in his eyes, big, brown, and clear,
And I cried: "O boy of mine,
Will you keep them true in the after-year?
Will you leave no heart to pine?"
Then out of the past came another's eyes—
Sad eyes of tear-dimmed blue—
Did he know they were not his mother's eyes?
For he answered me:
"Did you?"

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance

Roman Catholic Bishop and Unity.

In the Constructive Quarterly for December there is printed a letter from the late Bishop of Cremona, Italy, Geremia Bonomelli, addressed to the editor of the magazine in which this leading man of his communion expresses himself forcibly in behalf of the reunion of the three great communions, Roman, Anglican and Greek. He said:

"The work in which you invite me to participate is one which for those who believe and reason is of immense importance, religiously and politically. If it should be crowned with a happy issue, it would change the face of the earth. The union of the three great churches—the Roman, the Greek Orthodox, and the Anglican—would arrest the invasion of skepticism and universal irreligion which threatens the three continents, and would prepare a future that should be new in every respect. It is, therefore, the duty of every man to assist the great undertaking in whatever way he best can; never to lose heart in presence of the enormous difficulties. What are the means to attain this most exalted object? We, who have the grace to possess the faith of Jesus Christ, know that the first and chief means granted to all, and an available means, is Prayer."

Episcopalians Will Help Chicago Poor.

There was a special meeting of the Chicago deanery of Episcopalians in the church club rooms recently to hear the report of a special committee appointed to devise ways and means of helping Chicago's poor. It is proposed that the Episcopalians plan to aid by taking responsibility for the care of young men from eighteen to twenty-five. When these appear at the Municipal lodging house, they will be turned over to the church authorities for shelter and care. This would bring about a very desirable segregation of the unemployed, it is thought.

From Catholics to Episcopalians.

Less than a year ago, Rev. Victor von Kubinyi and his Hungarian congregation at South Bend, Ind., transferred their allegiance from the Roman Catholic church to the Protestant Episcopal. They are now engaged in building a place of worship to house their activities in the fellowship of the Episcopalians. The new place of worship will seat a hundred and eighty people. Rev. Kubinyi is of noble birth and is able to speak Polish, French, Italian and English in addition to his native tongue.

Prayer for the Dead Commended.

On All Souls' Day, the Archbishop of Canterbury, preaching to a large mid-day congregation at All Hallow, Barking-by-the-Tower, England, on the occasion of the dedication of the church, spoke at some length on the duty of the church in bringing consolation to those who were in mourining on account of the war. He commended the practice of prayer for the dead, though the Episcopalian book of prayer provides no forms for such practice. He said prayers for the dead were excised at the close of the middle ages on account of abuses that arose but that they might be safely recognized by the church of the present time.

Higher Criticism at Princeton.

Rev. Stuart Lawrence Tyson, formerly chaplain of the University of the South, and an Episcopalian, spoke before the undergraduate students of Princeton University under the auspices of the Christian Association, on "Historical Criticism as an Aid to Faith." He said: "The Bible is like a basket of fruit. Historical criticism saves us from eating the basket, and thus enables us to be nourished by the fruit."

Chinese President Favors Missionary.

President Yuan Shi Kai of China has recently violated some age long traditions of China and thus complimented Sherwood Eddy, the great Y. M. C. A. worker of the orient. Mr. Eddy was coming to Pekin to preach to the students of the city and it was announced that it would be necessary to build a temporary shed to hold the crowd. The President offered to assign space for the shed on the sacred grounds of the temple of heaven, Pekin's most famous shrine of the old paganism. There were reasons for not accepting the proffer but its significance was not lost sight of. A shed was erected to hold four thousand people and it was crowded. There were 654 new members added to the Y. M. C. A. in that city. One wife says of her husband, "Since he joined that association, my husband has treated me kindly for the first time in our married life."

President Yuan Shi Kai, of China, who showed favor to Sherwood Eddy, Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

Lawsuits Over Church Union.

There have been a number of lawsuits involving property that have followed in the wake of the union of Cumberland Presbyterians with the northern Presbyterian body. Two recent decisions have been favorable to the union. Dec. 1 the supreme court of Missouri handed down a decision in Missouri Valley College versus Guthrie, and Hays versus Manning (the Odell Avenue church, Marshall, case), favorable to the union in both cases. Judge Davis in the circuit court of Saline county had decided the college case in favor of the Presbyterian Church, and the Odell church case in favor of the Cumberlands. The supreme court affirms his judgment with reference to Missouri Valley College and reverses him in the Odell Avenue case. In the latter the judgment is reversed and remanded with directions.

Pastor Wishes No Christmas Presents.

The pressure of poverty among the Chicago unemployed is very severe this winter and this fact led Rev. David Hugh Jones, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Evanston to make an unusual announcement in his services recently. He asked his congregation not to make him any Christmas presents this year but to use the money for the poor. He also suggested a great reduction in price of presents given to each other by members of his congregation. He is pastor of one of the wealthier churches of Chicago Presbyterianism.

Rev. "Billy" Sunday Coming to Chicago.

The West Side group of churches in Chicago issued a call to Rev. "Billy" Sunday to come to Chicago recently. Word has been received that he has accepted the invitation and will begin services there sometime near March, 1916. A committee is already at work on the details. It was in Chicago that Mr. Sunday first came into the Christian life in the Pacific Garden mission.

W. J. Bryan's Interdenominationalism.

Hon. William Jennings Bryan spoke before the Presbyterians of Chicago Nov. 29, filling the Auditorium theater, the largest place of assemblage in the city. He declared himself a Presbyterian but said he had an interdenominational family. He said, "I am a Presbyterian elder but the Presbyterians should not put too much emphasis on the fact for they have not always been willing to be responsible for what I have said. Besides, my Presbyterianism was somewhat of an accident, for I was only fourteen when I joined the church and I did not know anything about its creeds, and moreover, it was a Cumberland Presbyterian church. I joined it because it was father's church. My mother had been a Baptist before her marriage and my wife was a Methodist until she joined me in the Presbyterian fold. Our oldest child is an Episcopalian, our second is a Methodist and our youngest is a Congregationalist. We have six grandchildren and through them we expect to be connected with other branches of the Church. I speak for all denominations and I am willing to work with any people who serve Jesus Christ."

Great Peace Meetings in Chicago.

There were two great church peace meetings in Chicago on the same day, Dec. 8. The Chicago board members of the Church Peace Union called a luncheon at the Hotel La Salle. These representatives were Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch, Jenkin Lloyd Jones and Dr. Shailer Mathews. In the evening of that day,

Dr. Frederich Lynch of New York, secretary of the Church Peace Union, founded by Andrew Carnegie, delivered the principal address at the banquet of the Baptist Social Union.

Modernists Found Sunday Schools.

It is stated that over two hundred Sunday-schools have been founded in Holland by pastors and leaders of the Modernist movement. It is the purpose of these leaders to bring up children with religious ideas that are consistent with the point of view of modern thought.

Presbyterian Comity Disturbed.

That there are two Presbyterian bodies working in the south is often the occasion of embarrassing situations. Northern Presbyterians not only have a few churches in the south that remained with the northern body through the Civil War but they also have some missionary churches. The church at Lafayette, La., has declared itself an independent church on account of friction concerning its pastor, Dr. J. J. Barr. Dr. Barr was dismissed from the Presbytery of New Orleans at his own request, thus leaving the southern branch of the denomination. After he was received by the Presbytery of Jefferson, representing the northern church, he was excommunicated by the Presbytery of New Orleans. The Presbytery of Jefferson then installed him as pastor of his former church. The incident may tend to retard the union of these two branches of Presbyterianism.

University-Wide Religious Campaign.

Northwestern University held a week of special meetings in the interest of the religious life of the students on Dec. 7-13. There were meetings and conferences for special groups at every hour of the day from early morning until late at nght. In the evening, there were joint mass meetings with addresses by the great leaders of Methodism. One of the features was a period in the day when the leaders of the movement might be consulted privately in an office, by the students, with regard to religious problems. Among the leading speakers in this movement were Bishop Theodore S. Henderson, Rev. William Hints, student pastor of Ames, Iowa, Rev. Horace G. Smith, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church of Glencoe, Ill., Rev. J. C. Carwardine, pastor of Douglas Park Methodist Episcopal church of Chicago and Mrs. W. F. McDowell, wife of Bishop McDowell. Missions and social service were given a vital and prominent part in the commendation of religion to the students.

Dr. George A. Lofton Stricken.

Dr. George A. Lofton, seventy-five years of age, and for the past twenty-six years pastor of the Central Baptist church, Nashville, Tenn., recently suffered a stroke of paralysis. Dr. Lofton has been a great preacher of the Gospel and a defender of the faith. One volume of his sermons has had a circulation of 300,000. He has just published The Wreck Restored, a poem of merit. If Dr. Lofton is laid aside permanently the Baptists will suffer a great loss.

Livingstone's Grandchildren Missionaries.

Two grandchildren of David Livingstone (Dr. Livingstone Wilson and his sister, Miss Livingstone Wilson) have recently gone to central Africa as missionaries of the United Free Church of Scotland.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

It is the purpose of The Christian Century, as occasion affords and space may allow, to present reviews, or excerpts from reviews, of the editor's book on "The Meaning of Baptism." As to the fairness of the criticisms, or even as to their accuracy in representing what the book teaches, it is not necessary to make any comment. Some of these representations the author absolutely repudiates. But the book must stand for itself. We believe our readers will be interested in knowing what others think of it, and the reviews are reprinted simply for their news value.

THE CENTRAL CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE (METHODIST)

By Rev. P. C. Herbert.

The above caption is the title of a new book by Charles Clayton Morrison, editor of The Christian Century, of Chicago, and published by the "Disciples Publication Society." This is a remarkable book. It is a candid reversal of the well-known dogma of immersion for baptism. It is refreshing to find that the discussion of this controverted subject is no longer undertaken in the spirit of an antagonist unsheathing his sword to attack a "foe;" but is in the spirit of brotherhood with all believers in Christ. In this same spirit this review is undertaken.

The author says truly, (page 26) "The baptism question is not a scholar's question any longer. It is a plain man's question." "We have on our hands a problem in English, not a problem in Greek." Then he goes on to show that the Greek word bapto, and its derivative baptizo, were subject to change of meaning in various use the same as many other words. His illustrations are: psallo, originally meant pick; then to play upon the harp by picking; then to sing, or make melody; then the composition sung, etc. Hence psalm, psalter, etc And candidatus, (Latin) originally meant, "one clothed in white;" then as a Roman official was inducted into office in a white toga, it finally came to mean the official so inaugurated. Consequently candidate.

Also the Greek word bapto originally meant dip, then as dyeing and washing were usually performed by dipping, the derived form baptizo came to signify the thing done even though it might be done by sprinkling or pouring. Then finally the word came to be used to denote the ceremony of induction into a religious order or society.

In reviewing the book I wish to show first what the author says baptism does not mean; secondly to treat what the author says it does mean; and thirdly to examine some of his exegesis.

First: On pages 33, 37, 38, 39, 47, 59, 61, 88, and 89, the author declares that baptism does not mean the following things: Not merely immersion in water. "To baptize a convert to Judaism meant to confer upon him the religious and political status of a Jew. The proselyte's "baptism" was administered by immersion in water, but the baptism was not the immersion. Page 33. "It was a religious ceremony, an institutional function, not a mere specific physical action." Page 36. Here our author declares that baptism is "not a mere specific physical action." On page 38 he declares that it is absurd to demand that "immerse" be submitted in our language for baptize. "This word in its New Testament use refers to a rite, a ceremony, including in its connotation the significance of the ceremony and not merely the physical act by which the ceremony was carried out." If the word baptizo, which belonged to the common speech of this Greek-speaking age, had meant "immerse" or "dip," as Baptists and Disciples have confidently taught, the Author of the "Didache" would have made himself ridiculous by advising that immersion could be performed by pouring water on the head thrice. Manifestly the Greek word did not mean immerse. It denoted the rite of becoming a member of the Church.

The "Didache" or "Teaching of the Apostles," was a production of the latter part of the first century, and in that part which refers to baptism, it says that baptism may be performed by pouring water upon the head of a candidate. As the author says it is absurd to think that immersion could be performed in this manner.

The usual claim put forward, that immersion only is baptism, is intolerable. "Baptism is validly solemnized by other forms." Page 88.

Furthermore, the author says that baptism is not a memorial of the death, burial and resurrection of Christ. He admits that "this idea prevails quite generally in immersionist circles;" but says that "there is not an iota of evidence for this." He says. "we do not die to sin and bury the old self by immersion in water. We do not rise into the new life by emerging from water. The physical act is not spiritually efficacious. Millions of Christians there are who have been buried with Christ in baptism who have not been immersed in water." They are Christians, members of the Church of Christ.'

This is a wonderful admission, coming as it does from a representative scholar in one of the largest bodies of Christians that practice immersion exclusively for baptism. I am truly glad our brother has come to this catholic position, which is the only true one. But on page 184 he says, "they have missed something." He means the unimmersed: but he does not tell us what they have missed. He is kind enough, though, to tell us, "but they have missed nothing essential." Now if they have missed nothing essential, they need not be unduly alarmed.

Secondly, we will consider what the author says baptism does mean. We have found that he says it does not mean immersion nor any mere physical action. His main contention is that baptism is a religious rite or ceremony of induction into a religious order or brotherhood. Baptism confers certain benefits. To a Jewish proselyte. it conferred the religious and political status of a Jew. He argues at some length that baptism confers all the privileges of the order or society which grants the rite; and that the recipient therein commits himself to all the doctrines held and the obligations that are common to the brotherhood to which he seeks admission. Now I think that no one can find any serious fault with such a position, except that he does not nearly exhaust the meaning of the rite. It means all he claims for it, and more.

Distinctions and Differences.

Why should we attempt to distinguish between the Lord's Prayer and the Intercessory Prayer by calling the former the Disciples' Prayer? If Jesus uttered both prayers why not call them his? We never think of calling the teaching he gave his disciples their teaching. What is gained by such a distinction is difficult to see.

Sometimes the point is made that the Disciples' movement is a Restoration movement and not a Reformation. As a matter of fact a restoration is impossible without a reformation. Both are as inseparably related as the cloth is to the garment. And if we follow the writings of Alexander Campbell we shall find that he had no qualms of conscience in speaking of the current reformation. No harm will be done if the terms are used synonymously. At times one is compelled to conclude that among us there are some who believe that there will be neither reformation nor restoration without annihilation. To them a war to the death is the only possible road to unity.

Would it not be better to speak of apostolic Christianity rather than primitive Christianity, in view of the changes that have come over the latter word? We think of the primitive plough of the Orient, and when our minds pass to the primitive Church they carry with them the suggestion of the obsolete and the incongruous.

The old-time fear of referring to our ministers as Reverend is still upon us, but it is a flimsy fear if it rests solely upon the text, "Holy and reverend is his name." If reverend is applied to God, so is holy. If one cannot be lawfully used when applied to man neither can the other. If a preacher feels himself duly elated when he sees this prefix to his name he should warn his friends that they are really exalting him to the papacy when they only meant to treat him courteously, and that they must forego their good intentions as they value his soul's salvation. On the other hand, if a man feels that the title before his name neither jeopardizes his self-respect nor his influence there can be no possible objection to its use. If the title is bigger than the man it should be avoided; if the man is superior to the title it can do him no harm. The pope did not become pope because of his titles. He used them because he was a pope, just as he used his carriage. One did not make him any more than the other.

The man whom a title would undo is undone already.

Religious Bogeyism.

We are perfectly familiar with the art of creating spooks for purposes of revenue in bellumist circles, and many are familiar with the art among the Disciples for the same ends. The big issues of war ought to challenge our best efforts in the cause of peace, compelling us to forget our grouches and our rheumatics. The bogies are born for the purpose of enlisting the fanaticism of the bigot in some cause or other. It seems that it is commercially profitable to promote a panic among brethren by setting up a scarecrow. As a business measure, while panics can be converted into cash, the more the better. But if business is subordinate in the work of God then peaceful measures should be proposed and acted upon. Think of the baseness to which that word "ecclesiasticism" has been degraded! It has been made to cover a multitude of shortages in one way or another.

If all the bogies that have been imported from the regions of scaredom in the past twenty-five years could pass before us in martial array they would present an imposing spectacle. We have been taught to sleep with one eye open for spooks, to live with our finger on the trigger, to suspect every man who does not lose his identity in the crowd, to consider no man safe unless he is rickety with panic prospects. The men who will not swallow popular brands of pabulum from incompetent hands and antiquated spoons are slated for slaughter. The bogey has no terror for them; they are on to the game and therefore they must be despatched. They are undesirables in the theological realm where their desire to be shown embarrasses the spook-makers. Beware of the panic mongers who befuddle issues and bid us prepare for the worst, which is always on the wing and headed in our direction.

The bogyist sees nothing but the hole in the doughnut.

Ephemeral Journalism in Detail.

I recently alluded to the wrecks of ephemeral journalism scattered along the pathway of our Disciple history. Here is a list of some of the journals that were born at various times and died in youth through neglect.

"The Evangelist," Walter Scott, editor, 1832-42; "The British Millennial Harbinger," 1835; "The Primitive Christian," S. E. Shepherd, editor, New York, 1835-38; "The Apostolic Advocate," Dr. Thomas, editor, Virginia; "The Investigator," —— Hunter, editor, Massachusetts, 1835-36; "The Christian Messenger," B. W. Stone, editor, 1826-44; "The Christian Preacher," D. S. I am told that "The Protestant Unionist," edited by Walter Scott, was the first weekly among the Disciples. It came to an untimely end.

Of the "Heretic Detector," edited by Arthur Crihfield, Dr. Robert Richardson in the Memoirs of Alexander Campbell, says:

"Mr. Crihfield was a man of considerable ability, though superficial in his attainments. He seemed much devoted to the cause, and afterward edited for some years a periodical which he called "The Heretic Detector." In this, growing heady and opinionative, as is common with those who consider other people's faults to the neglect of their own, he lost for a time the confidence of the brotherhood. This, however, by an abandonment of his censorious and imprudent course, he subsequently in a good degree regained, for he was a sincere-hearted believer, and falling after some years into a decline, gave ample evidence, not only of his confidence in the truth, but of his regret for the improper spirit in which he had essayed to defend it."

All of which leads us to remark that if all our heretic detectors had followed the later example of Mr. Crihfield in his regret for the improper spirit in which he essayed to defend the truth, we would not today be the victims of many of our dissensions. Why such a journal with such a name and such a laudable purpose should have died in the first flush of its career, and not have continued shedding its light upon the darkness of our heresies down to a green old age, is one of the mysteries which we must enroll with many others which have perplexed us in the dread Apocalypse! Its faith was unimpeachable, but the vulgar hunger of the printer had to be fed, and that required cash.

When one reads all these attempts to defend the truth and preserve one's name in the earth, and considers how brief their life and sad their lot, well may he exclaim with the poet:

"O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

The Book World

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The Evolution of Early Christianity. By Shirley Jackson Case. Is Christianity a living, developing religion, and has it been so from the first, or is it static, and quantitative, an insert in human life, a sacred deposit of the past?

The decision that only in terms of a true development can Christianity find its explanation has been slow in attaining acceptance. Even yet most of its interpreters, while fully conceding and even insisting upon its evolution from period to period would emphasize a certain original essence, the heart of the gospel, in contrast to which the incidental features of a realistic eschatology, early Christian belief in angels and demons, a vivid supernaturalism, a species of sacramentalism, and an idea of the miraculous character of religious experiences, would be recognized.

It is Professor Case's thesis that "the primary activity which called the Christian movement into existence was not the AB EXTRA insertion of some other worldly quantity of ritual, doctrine or ethical instruction into the realm of human experience, but an outburst of spiritual energy on the part of Jesus and his followers, striving after new and richer religious attainments under the stimuli of a new and more suggestive environment."

This conception of the problem makes necessary the recognition of the value of all the phenomena of the early Christian movement as significant for study, and not merely the lives and activities of the few forceful personalities with whose names the enterprise is most closely connected. Furthermore, it discloses the importance of reinvestigating the various features of that rich environment upon which the Christian leaders reacted with such impressive results. In the elucidation of this phase of the subject, Prof. Case presents interesting chapters on the Mediterranean world in New Testament times, the Jewish connections of the early Christians, the breach between Christians and Jews, the contact of the early Christians with Gentile religions, the religious significance of emperor worship and of philosophical speculation, and the hellenistic religions of redemption. These are not unfamiliar fields of New Testament study, but so much new material has been contributed of late by scholars in many lands that a restatement of the facts is of great value.

In the final chapter on the "Triumph of Christianity" the method by which these varied elements of the age were utilized, modified, transformed or overcome is discussed, and the place of Paul in the process is particularly dealt with. The entire work is vital and stimulating. There are many points at which question and protest will arise, but the value of the book to the candid student of Christian origin is undeniable. The Story of Phaedrus. By Newell Dwight Hillis. A romance of the early Christian days. The eloquent pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, has undertaken in this volume to give some idea of the simple human manner in which the writings of the New Testament took form and were gathered into a collection.

Phaedrus was a young Greek, the misfortunes of whose family left him in slavery, as the librarian of a wealthy official of Ephesus. In the household there were Christians, secretly meeting, for fear of persecution. Introduced to this circle, the boy seized the occasion of a sudden panic, stole some rolls of parchment and other Christian property, and fled to Rome.

The reading of the rolls made of him a Christian. He devoted his life to the literary task of collecting and reproducing the manuscripts of apostolic writing, and at last died a martyr to the faith. The pictures of first century conditions, Greek culture, Roman politics, Christian heroism, and the social characteristics of the time, are given with fidelity to fact. The story is entertaining, and the human aspects of the making of New Testament literature are presented in a somewhat ideal manner. (Macmillan. $1.25 net.)

The Gospel of Jesus and the Problems of Democracy. By Henry C. Vedder. The author of this vigorous work is professor of theology in Crozer Theological Seminary, and is perhaps the best authority on Baptist history. In this volume, however he has taken up the vital questions of the modern church in the effort to discover what is wrong in the average preaching and church work in the present generation, that it should be seemingly so ineffective.

It is the thesis of the present volume that Christianity has been conceived too largely in the terms of monarchy rather than of the democracy of which Jesus spoke. Christianity can be nothing less than such concern for humanity as would prevent a man from living an unsocial, selfish life. "The man who piously trusts in the blood of Jesus to save him, but owns a tenement on which there is no fire escape, will find that the blood of Jesus was shed in vain, so far as he is concerned, if that house burns and destroys the lives of its inmates. For that man is nothing less than a murderer, and a far greater criminal than the man who in passion takes the life of his fellow, for he slays in cold blood and in mere sordidness."

It is for this reason that a good deal of the talk of the church regarding the gospel sounds remote and unconvincing to the man who has the least acquaintance with the ideals of Jesus. "Not long ago a distinguished layman addressing a Congregational gathering made a plea for the preaching of what he called 'the pure and simple gospel.' And he defined his meaning in words quoted from an orthodox preacher: 'We should constantly hold up Sinai and Calvary to mankind. The vicarious atonement should be emphasized. The sacrifice of Christ should be presented daily. His deity and mediatorial work should be constantly kept before the people. The whole gospel and nothing but the gospel should be preached.' Would it be possible in the same space to state anything more widely differing from the gospel Jesus proclaimed?"

The chapters that follow deal with the church in relation to specific problems of the present social order, such as those of social justice, womanhood, the child, the slum, vice, crime, disease, poverty and lawlessness. Every one of these questions is handled with full presentation of facts, and with the appeal for the application of the real, not the superficial or conventional, gospel of Jesus in their solution. If any defender of aristocracy and privilege can read this book without having his conscience disturbed he is deeply fixed in his social creed. The treatment is all the more convincing coming as it does not from a revolutionary but a representative of the finest culture our Christian society can produce.

Dr. Vedder is not aware that there seems to be an inconsistency between his position as a teacher and author and his urgent appeal for a better social condition. He thinks it quite possible that some readers may say, "Here is a man who advocates one thing and does another. He condemns the wage system, yet works for a salary. He is strong against monopolies, yet copyrights his book. He declares all dividends and interest immoral, yet is supported by the income of endowments invested in stocks, bonds and mortgages." Then he continues, "All of which is a true bill. And therefore here is a good place to emphasize a thing which should never be overlooked in our discussion of social evils: the individual is powerless in the grip of the social system. He has to live his life under social conditions as they are, not as he thinks they should be, not as he hopes they will be. This is just as true of the millionaire as of the wage earner. The individual is powerless, except (and note the exception, for it is a large one) that he is morally bound, while reluctantly accepting the facts as they are, to protest against them with all his power, and strive as best he may to amend them."

Each chapter is furnished with an extended bibliography. (Macmillan. $1.50 net.)

LITERARY NOTE

A new weekly journal has appeared under the title "The New Republic." Its editorial force includes some well-known names headed by Herbert Croly. Its early numbers are excellent reading and its opinions are frank and refreshing. It concerns itself with a wider variety of themes than the "Critic," is less captious than "The Nation," but lacks, of course, the religious note of "The Outlook" and "The Independent." There is certainly room for a new voice in the field of the most dignified and constructive journalism, and we shall watch with great interest the successive numbers of the "New Republic" to see whether its early promise is sustained.

"The Great Illusion"

Norman Angell Shatters Some Classic Arguments Offered in Behalf of War.

THE deplorable European War has set all of us to thinking and reading about the great problems of war and peace. We have been concerned about them for a long time past, but as far off issues, that did not directly touch us; our only personal relation to them was on the policy of maintaining standing armies, and the building of great battleships.

THE WORLD'S MOST DESTRUCTIVE STRUGGLE.

But now, abruptly, we are brought face to face with the most stupendous and destructive struggle since time began. What does it all mean? Were the old prophets speaking idle words when they foretold the day of universal peace? Have the teachings of the Prince of Peace failed utterly in the most Christian lands of the world? Our bewilderment grows, when we note the number of books that are being put on the market by the advocates of war. I have before me now two volumes, "The Valor of Ignorance," by General Homer Lee, of the United States Army, and "Germany and the Next War," by General von Bernhardi, both claiming that war is a good thing, and a necessity of national growth. General Lee says "That the law of progress is the law of force," and speaks scornfully of peace advocates as "Half educated, sick-brained visionaries, denying the inexorability of the primordial law of struggle."

The German General is even more extreme in his statements; he maintains that "War is in itself a good thing, and a biological necessity of the first importance," he urges Germany to attack her enemies before they are ready to attack her, and says, "The attempt to abolish war is immoral, and unworthy of humanity."

Besides these, there is Admiral Mahan, who died recently, and who has written a number of books in favor of war; Ex-President Roosevelt, who wrote not long ago, "That by war alone can we acquire those virile qualities, necessary to win in the stern strife of life," and others, too numerous to mention.

A PLEA FOR PEACE.

In this confusing din of voices, it is a cause for thanksgiving to read so sane and lucid a plea for peace as Norman Angell's, "The Great Illusion." It was published in England in 1909, by an unknown author and publisher; Mr. Angell calls himself, "An obscure person, without means, and without leisure." There have been fourteen reprints and new editions of the book abroad, and it is now in the fourth American edition. It has been translated into thirteen different languages, including all European and many Oriental tongues. Current reviews, from the highest sources, speak of it as the greatest book since Darwin's "Origin of Species," and as more convincing as to the futility of war, than all the eloquent and ethical appeals of Tolstoi.

Mr. Angell denies in general terms the statements quoted above, and says "That the law of progress is the elimination of force"—that the day for progress by force has passed; now, we must have progress by ideas, or not at all. He denies that the struggle for existence, taught by evolutionists, is the struggle of man with man, but is the struggle of man with nature; and that this law involves a closer co-operation between man and man, in order to subdue and control their common enemies.

THE ECONOMIC ARGUMENT.

His main argument, however, is not based on such general statements as these, but on the economic conditions which have resulted from the mechanical developments of the past forty years. In noting these changed conditions, he says that the old arguments for war, which were applicable to ancient and medieval times, are no longer applicable to us, and characterizes this influence in the striking phrase, "the hypnotism of an obsolete phraseology." The substitution of machine labor for human labor, especially in the rapidity and facility of communication and transportation has brought about a vital interdependence between communities and nations; this has resulted in a division of labor and profits, so that now large parts of the world are dependent on other parts of the world for their products—on Argentina for cattle, on Australia for wool, on Canada and the Dakotas for wheat, on the Southern States for cotton, and so forth. Today, no civilized nation liveth to itself.

And there is not only this interdependence of trade, but an interdependence of finance as well. The commercial and financial relations between the great capitals of the world are so intimate and complex, that a disturbance in New York involves London, Paris and Berlin to a degree never known before.

Another result of these new economic conditions is the intangibility of wealth. Riches no longer consist in tangible things like slaves and jewels and bullion, but in the paper tokens of wealth—the stocks and bonds whose securities may be at a far distant place. They would be of no value as military spoils, unless the conqueror could also seize the securities upon which they were based—and they might be on the other side of the world.

WAR UNPROFITABLE TO ALL.

All of this goes to prove that the world has passed out of that stage of development, in which it is possible for our civilized group to advance its interests by the military conquest of another group—that war is now bound to be unprofitable to both belligerents. So closely woven and complicated are modern economic conditions, that the ordinary spoils of victory have become futile things; no longer can the conqueror bear off his spoils in slaves and treasures, like the Viking of old.

The payment of indemnities does not now necessarily result in the betterment of the victors. Mr. Angell states that in the Franco-German war of 1870, France paid to Germany one billion of dollars, besides ceding Alsace-Lorraine. Less than a decade after, France was in a better financial position than Germany. Bismarck spoke of it publicly as "an absurd miracle." French securities were then quoted at 98, and German consols at 83.

Japan, instead of being richer from her victory over Russia, is breaking all records in the heaviness of her taxation. The Japanese people pay on an average thirty per cent of this net income in taxes, and those of large means an even larger proportion; if a Japanese possesses an income of ten thousand dollars a year he has to surrender six thousand of it in taxation. This, and other phases of our modern economic conditions, shows the futility of military conquest, and constitutes the "great illusion" which gives its name to the book.

"ARMS AND INDUSTRY."

Mr. Angell's later book, "Arms and Industry" is but a repetition of the arguments in "The Great Illusion;" both are written in a clear and delightful style and should be read by every one who is concerned about the great and pressing problems of war and peace. Here is one of the many fine passages on the folly of war:

"What is the real process of war? You carefully select from the general population, on both sides, the healthiest, sturdiest, the physically and mentally soundest, those possessing precisely the virile and manly qualities which you desire to perpetuate, and having thus selected the elite of the two populations, you proceed to exterminate them by battle and disease; you leave the worst on both sides to amalgamate in the process of conquest or defeat, and from this amalgam, you create the new nation which is to carry on the race. The result is even more disastrous in the physical betterment of the race, than when they exterminated the women, children, the old men, and those too weak and feeble to go to war."

CAN SUFFRAGISTS AVERT WAR?

The committee of the International Woman Suffrage Alliance, representing twenty-six countries and twelve millions of women, has issued a manifesto to the governments of all nations. It has been presented to the foreign ambassadors in London, and to Sir Edward Grey. The appeal declared:

"In this terrible hour, when the fate of Europe depends on decisions which women have no power to shape, we, realizing our responsibilities as the mothers of the race, cannot stand passively by. Powerless though we are politically, we call upon the governments and powers of our several countries to avert the threatened unparalleled disaster.

"Women find themselves on the brink of the almost unbearable position of seeing all that they most reverence and treasure—the home, the family, the race—subjected not merely to risks, but to certain and extensive damage which they are powerless either to avert or assuage. Whatever its result, the conflict will leave mankind the poorer, will set back civilization, and will be a powerful check to the amelioration in the condition of the masses of the people, on which so much of the real welfare of the nations depends.

"We women of twenty-six countries, having banded ourselves together in the International Woman Suffrage Alliance with the object of obtaining political means of sharing with men the power which shapes the fate of nations, appeal to you to leave untried no method of conciliation or arbitration for arranging international differences which may help to avert deluging half the civilized world in blood."

(7) And the people served Jehovah all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that outlived Joshua, who had seen all the great work of Jehovah that he had wrought for Israel. (8) And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Jehovah, died, being a hundred and ten years old. (9) And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-heres, in the hill-country of Ephraim, on the north of the mountain of Gaash. (10) And also all that generation were gathered unto their fathers: and there arose another generation after them, that knew not Jehovah, nor yet the work which he had wrought for Israel.

(11) And the children of Israel did that which was evil in the sight of Jehovah, and served the Baalim; (12) and they forsook Jehovah, the God of their fathers, who brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the peoples that were round about them, and bowed themselves down unto them; and they provoked Jehovah to anger. (13) And they forsook Jehovah, and served Baal and the Ashtaroth. (14) And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Israel, and he delivered them into the hands of spoilers that despoiled them; and he sold them into the hands of their enemies round about, so that they could not any longer stand before their enemies. (15) Whithersoever they went out, the hand of Jehovah was against them for evil, as Jehovah had spoken, and as Jehovah had sworn unto them: and they were sore distressed.

(16) And Jehovah raised up judges, who saved them out of the hand of those that despoiled them. (17) And yet they hearkened not unto their judges; for they played the harlot after other gods, and bowed themselves down unto them: they turned aside quickly out of the way wherein their fathers walked, obeying the commandments of Jehovah; but they did not so. (18) And when Jehovah raised them up judges, then Jehovah was with the judge, and saved them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the judge: for it repented Jehovah because of their groaning by reason of them that oppressed them and vexed them. (19) But it came to pass, when the judge was dead, that they turned back, and dealt more corruptly than their fathers, in following other gods to serve them, and to bow down unto them; they ceased not from their doings, nor from their stubborn way.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

7. The people. The reference is to the people of Israel.—Jehovah. The Hebrew word is "Yahweh." In some of the versions this word is translated LORD, but it is not strong enough to express the idea of God.—The elders. The word is not used with primary reference to age, but refers to the head men of the clans and families, who were the natural guardians of Israelitish custom, law, and religion.—The great work of Jehovah. The great work of Jehovah is not to be limited to the conquest of Canaan, but includes the great deliverance, the exodus, the wandering, and the invasion, to all of which Joshua's generation had been witnesses.

8. Compare Joshua 24:29. A hundred and ten years old. The age of his ancestor Joseph. Gen. 50:22, 26.

9. They buried him in the border of his inheritance. Better, within the bounds of his estate, or the lands which were allotted to him. Joshua 19:49, 50. Timnath-serah is the modern Tibneh near which are some remarkable tombs, one of which some recognize as the tomb of Joshua.

10. All that generation. The contemporaries of Joshua; see notes on v. 7.—Were gathered unto their fathers. They died and were interred in the family cemetery.—That knew not Jehovah. They did not by personal experience know Jehovah as Deliverer, Leader, Conqueror. They had not shared those wonderful experiences which had been to their fathers the proof of Jehovah's power.

11. The children of Israel did that which was evil in the sight of Jehovah. A common form of expression used to introduce the stories of other judges; for examples see 3:7, 12; 4:1; 6:1; 10:6; 13:1. The "evil is generally an offense against religion, the worship of other gods.—Served the Baalim. "Baalim" is the plural form of "Baal." It is a generic term for God common in the Semitic language, and signifying owner. In ordinary social conditions it was applied to the owner of a field or house, etc. The husband is the Baal to his wife. From such a usage the term became applied to the patron deity of the place. At the time of the conquest it denoted the numerous gods of the Canaanites among whom the people of Israel lived, 3:5. The worship of Baal was frightfully degrading to Israel, and therefore rightfully denounced by the Jews.

13. Served Baal and the Ashtaroth. Ashtaroth is the plural form of Ashtoreth, which is the Hebrew name of Astarte, a Semitic goddess. She is everywhere the great female principle answering to the Baal of the Canaanites.

14. The anger of Jehovah. God is conceived of as an oriental judge, who exhibits great anger when dealing with an offender. —The hands of spoilers. Probably marauding parties of Canaanites making frequent incursions in their lands, carrying away cattle and spoiling crops. He sold them. Denotes complete possession. Their enemies. The same surrounding nations for whose religion they had forsaken their own. v. 12.

15. Whithersoever they went out. In every campaign or undertaking.—The hand of Jehovah. The power of Jehovah was not only not with them but it was against them. —As Jehovah had threatened. The reference is to such scriptures as Deut. 28 and Lev. 26.

16. Judges. The judges of this book are the champions and leaders of Israel in its conflicts with its enemies and oppressors. These men after peace was attained are said to have "judged Israel," hence their name.

18. Parallel to v. 16, see above. Jehovah was with the judge. Read Joshua 1:5. God is the real leader of men and nations. He alone has the power to save.

19. When the judge was dead, then they turned back. When the judge was dead, they looked upon the dam which checked the stream of their idolatry as removed, and then it flowed down with so much the more fury.—Matthew Henry. The tenses express what happened over and over again in the life of these people.

Serving at Godless Shrines

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

We leave the rich life of the New Testament for the coming year and go back to the primitive existence of early Israel. Unless we are able to orient ourselves and allow for the crudities of that early day we shall have a sorry time of it for the next twelve months of study.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

Deep moral principles are buried in the traditions and highly embellished narratives that come down to us, and, if we are discriminating, we may discover these to our eternal good. Our task will be to find the human and the divine elements in these stories of ancient kings, poets and prophets.

"THE DAYS OF JOSHUA."

We recall the stirring example of Joshua when he said that for himself and his family they would serve God. That firm and unequivocal stand put stamina into the people for months. How often one brave man has put iron into the blood of a whole generation. I know of a town where one man put out the saloons and as long as he lived the saloons stayed out. Many a church has one outstanding character—man or woman—who holds to the right path the feet of many.

"ANOTHER GENERATION AROSE."

But Joshua died and then a flabbier generation came upon the scene. We are seeing something like that now. Never a set of young folks as worldly as that of the present. This frivolous dancing craze; this itching for constant amusement; this epoch of cigarettes; sometimes we wonder what will happen when the church is turned over to this gang of irresponsibles! Let us not be too hard on them. There are yet four young men out of every hundred who profess faith in Christ! There are occasional young women who give promise of growing up to be gracious and noble women! In my own church one class of fifty young men attends church every Sunday morning, and there are many charming Christian young women; but when I see the crowds that stream up and down the white-lighted avenues at night, I say, I wonder. This much at least we may say: No set of parents dares to neglect religious education. For a generation is already arising that knows not God.

"GOD OF THE PEOPLE ROUND ABOUT."

What a modern expression! There you have it. The mad desire to be like the people round about. We sell our souls to be good fellows. We bow to the gods and goddesses in vogue in our neighborhood. No matter how shameful or shameless the dress, no matter what manners or customs prevail—we worship at the shrines set up in the land. We bring our dearest treasures and sacrifice them at these shrines. To be popular, fashionable, "in the swim," a right, regal Roman in Rome, a rollicking, ripping good Roman—that "is the life." Why cite illustrations? There are too many.

"THE HANDS OF THE SPOILERS."

Let's see—was this three thousand years ago? The man forsook God, God was indignant, the spoiler got in his work. Why, no, that happened yesterday. He was in my study this very morning telling me about it and now with wrecked health, with no prospect of a job, with his family scattered, the victim of his supposed friends who spoiled him of his last cent—he came around to the church that his father once attended —that father who also forgot God! The spoiler, the spoiler—meditate upon that awhile. The picture was painted with great care—the spoiler cut it into shreds with a knife; the statue was chiselled with infinite pains, chip after tiny chip—the spoiler smashed it with his hammer in two minutes; the child was reared with tender love and fondest hope—the spoiler ruined all that work in a night. What oceans of tears!

"THEY CEASED NOT."

Judges appeared but the willful people continued in their perverse paths. They would not hear them. Human nature has not changed much in these centuries after all.

Our Readers' Opinions

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION IN FRANCE.

I am quite sure that my highly esteemed friend, our excellent brother, Geo. A. Jewett of Des Moines, Ia., would not intentionally convey a wrong impression either about the Christian Mission in France, in which he has always shown a lively interest, or about my personal connection with it, for he and I are on excellent terms. I therefore conclude there must be some mistake in the quotation from The Christian Century reproduced in the Christian Standard of October 31, under the heading of "The Seamy Side."

The paragraph I refer to reads as follows:

> "Many amiable people, imagining that this work had some substance, have given generously to it. American travelers in Paris—like Mr. Geo. A. Jewett of Des Moines, Iowa—have returned to this country still wondering where the Paris Mission is located. Mr. Jewett says:
> "'At the time of my going to Paris in 1908 and many times after that, and during my long stay in Paris, I searched the city very thoroughly to try to find something to show for this work, some trace, but without any success.'"

Now it is inconceivable that Brother Jewett could have said that. Either he has got mixed up in his dates, or he has been misquoted; for I went to Paris as the special correspondent of the Christian Standard in the summer of 1909 and the Mission did not begin to take definite form until the fall of that year, since which time Brother Jewett has not been to Paris. But although Brother Jewett has not been to Paris since I entered upon the work there, he has constantly kept track of it, for next to the Christian Standard, The Christian Worker, which Brother Jewett edits, has been the paper that has most frequently and most sympathetically commended our work. I shall long remember the many acts of personal kindness I received from Brother Jewett when I was in Des Moines in June, 1913, and before I left the city he gave me his personal check for ten dollars for the French Mission. He never said anything to me about thoroughly searching the city, without success, to find our meeting place.

Geo. A. Jewett knows Paris well, having resided there for a considerable time. When I described to him at Des Moines the location of our two mission stations, Vanves and Bagnolet, he seemed to have a pretty clear idea of their whereabouts, although he did not claim to know the streets by name, he knew the localities. Others have found us out; E. E. Violett, O. G. Hertzog, Roy L. Brown, E. M. Waits, R. Errett, Vennum, Hensey, Cory, Hill and Justin Green and a whole host of others whose names do not occur to me at this moment have found us out, being tourists, just passing through or making only a brief stay. It is inconceivable that an old Parisian, like Brother Jewett should have failed where those visitors succeeded.

There is an explanation which is almost as inconceivable. Is it possible that Brother Jewett said "before" and that he was quoted as saying "after?" Brother Jewett resided in Paris before or during 1908. His futile search must have been then for the Delauney mission: not for the Seddon mission. In that case his experience agrees with my own: but in that case it throws the whole force of The Christian Century article on the other side for the Delauney mission was undertaken by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. As soon as I learned that there had once been a Christian Mission in Paris, I, like Brother Jewett, made strenuous efforts to find it or some trace of it. I went to an address in Paris furnished by an Australian brother who had, years before, met Brother Delauney in England; but nobody at that address could give me any information. I understood that Brother Delauney had some sons. Supposing that some of them might have remained in Paris, I looked up the Delauneys in the Paris directory and wrote to them without success. This was to me a disappointment because I had hoped to find some remnant of that earlier effort that would have been helpful to us. I do not mean to cast a reflection on any work that Brother Delauney may have done. In a great city like Paris, individuals are soon lost to view. But the moral is obvious, although it seems to have escaped the notice of The Christian Century, namely that failure, or apparent failure, can overtake an enterprise championed by a society as readily as one sustained by independent effort.

My candid statement about conditions in Paris seems to have led to an idea that the whole effort has been a failure. Such a conclusion would be very unjust, not only to me but to many earnest friends both in Paris and out of it who have put honest and sincere effort into the work. There are in Paris today several good Christian friends who would rally around a worthy pastor who should seek to build on the foundation we have already laid and the lessons we have learned in the initial attempt will prove of incalculable benefit to those who shall come after us.

CHRISTIAN SOCIOLOGY AS AN EVANGELISTIC AGENCY.

We have had controversial evangelism, sporadic evangelism, evolutionary evangelism, revolutionary evangelism. Now for an emphasis on social evangelism. In other words what is the rebound or the contribution that social salvation makes to individual salvation? Men are rather earnestly asking for the solution of such questions as child labor, minimum wage, old age pensions, and a score of other questions involving social injustice. There is a rather hopeful hopelessness about their confusion. Pure legislative cure thus far is not full of promise, it smacks too strongly of "Economic Determinism." It is external in its diagnosis and proposed cure, and since man is not wholly objective in his nature, it is disappointing. Earnest economists are feeling the need of an ever adequate motive around which to drape their legislation. They are beginning to look to Christianity to furnish that vitalizing motive. The Church which feels this in the atmosphere and comes forward has an opportunity.

But if the economist has felt his limitations the Church too with her individual salvation, has been bound to ask herself what is wrong. Her approach to the subjective life of man has also had its disappointments; for man is not only subjective but also objective by nature. The religious program which shall win must satisfy man in this dual requirement of his nature.

Your unchurched population has an undefined conviction that it has a right to a social demonstration of the claim that Christianity is the greatest force in modern society. Show how and why and that the "problems" will wait on Christianity for their final answer, and you have the ear, yes, better still, the admiration of the thinking unchurched. And they will seek a personal relation, a mystical identity with that which threw light on the "problems." The writer has used this method of evangelism for some time and has seen a large number of broad-gauged men appreciate the Christ thereby.

TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 30.

The Eternal Christ. Rev. 1:17-18.

The worldly hope men set their hearts upon
Turns ashes—or it prospers; and anon,
Like snow upon the desert's dusty face,
Lighting a little hour or two, is gone.

The spirit that mocks is never at a loss for examples of human weakness and folly. The wise man and the fool go down to the grave together. The palace of the king and the hut of the peasant sink into dust.

Think, in this battered caravanserai,
Whose portals are alternate night and day,
How sultan after sultan with his pomp
Abode his destined hour, and went his way.
They say the lion and the lizard keep
The courts where Jamshyd gloried and drunk deep:
And Bahram, that great hunter—the wild ass
Stamps o'er his head, but cannot break his sleep.

Generation after generation has gone into oblivion. The noise of war that has broken upon us this year will soon be a faint memory; and the great captains and kings will share the fate of Jamshyd. The wisdom of the wise will come to nought. Shall we then say with Omar that the really wise man will choose the pleasure of the moment?

But leave the wise to wrangle, and with me
The quarrel of the universe let be:
And in some corner of the hubbub coucht,
Make game of that which makes as much of thee.

Not many of us will follow Omar. The pessimistic mood comes over us now and then and we enjoy reading him as a sort of defiance to fate. But this mood is only temporary, and even when it is upon us, we know it will not last, and we order our lives in the gloomiest moments according to the commands of hope. We censure the man who wastes his strength in the pleasure. We think he could, if he were to try, find reasons for a great hope.

THE LIVING CHRIST.

The poet of despair compels us to take an inventory of our stock. We think we have what we do not. We put fictitious value upon our possessions. Once we are impressed with the fact of change, we inquire whether there is anything permanent. The word of Christ is that life goes on. "I was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore." The conditions of life change. Our environment differs from that of our fathers. Our children will live in a world that differs from the present. We need not despair because of changing environment if life goes on. Wisdom, strength, and influence go with life. They have not been lost or shown to be folly, weakness, and disgrace. If the wisdom of one day is insufficient for the next, is that discreditable to wisdom? If strength changes in form, does it thereby become weakness? Life uses the temporary, and the temporary has value in its relation to life.

THE LOVING CHRIST.

The economic struggle, love of power and honor engender hate and jealousy. War, dishonesty, and slander are urged by the skeptic as reasons for not believing in the power of love. Men hate each other, we are told. They seek each other's hurt. The success of one man causes pain to another man. The living Christ denies this doctrine of darkness. If he lives, love is alive, and alive forevermore. There are those who love us. We can live for them in full assurance that we are living the life that is wisest and best. "Knowledge grows, love is." "It is in the nature of fellowship with God to be always essentially the same."

Disciples Table Talk

College President Shot.

President Cramblet of Bethany College was shot and wounded last week by a whisky crazed man named Howard Woods of Bethany, W. Va. The shooting took place at one of the houses being built in a new section of the town near the Agricultural Club and the Alpha XI Delta Sorority House. Howard Woods, who has been absent from work several days, approached Dr. Cramblet and claimed that he had more money coming on a contract. This was denied and to avoid an argument the President ordered Woods from the property. Woods went to the home of a neighbor and borrowed a shotgun on some pretense and returning saw President Cramblet standing at the side of the house. He calmly took aim from the street and without warning to the President shot him in the back. The shot took effect but going through a heavy overcoat did not seriously injure him. The President turned and seeing Woods with the gun ran around the house out of his way. But Woods ran in the other direction and met him, taking aim again. Again President Cramblet turned and attempted to escape. As he glanced back the man fired and many of the shot took effect in the right side of his face, arm and back. Doctors were called and it was found that there were perhaps two hundred shot in his back, arm and face. Woods walked to his own home about a block away and was captured without resistance by a posse fifteen minutes later. Several young ladies from one of the sorority houses standing nearby and one or two of the young men at the Agricultural Club witnessed the affair. They state that the shooting was done in cold blood. The young men would have stopped him but upon making an attempt were threatened by the man with the gun. Doctor Cramblet was taken to the Heights late Friday evening. His condition was not thought immediately serious but there is some danger of blood poison. Had the man been at closer range the wounds would have been much worse. Woods is the father of five children and is a resident of Bethany. He was taken to the county jail at Wellsburg, W. Va.

Disciples Union Meets.

The Disciples Union of Youngstown, O., met on the evening of Dec. 16 and they were addressed by A. McLean, president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and three other missionary experts. There was a great missionary uplift from the meeting.

New Church Builds.

It is only this year that a church was organized at Glasgow, Mont. Five or six years ago there was agitation for an organization but only thirty members were found. This year forty members were found and the organization was perfected. Services have been held at the court house and in the Episcopal church. A bungalow building was built costing three thousand dollars. J. F. Ghormley formerly of Portland, Ore., and now of Great Falls, Mont., conducted the dedication services.

In and Around Chicago

Rev. "Billy" Sunday the famous baseball evangelist will address a union ministers' meeting Monday, December 21st promptly at 10:30 in the Auditorium of the Central Y. M. C. A., 19 S. La Salle Street. Mr. Sunday is negotiating with the ministers of Chicago's great West Side for a series of evangelistic meetings to be held in the not distant future. The various ministerial associations have voted to give up their regular meetings on that date in order that all the ministers may have a chance to hear this remarkable man. The Y. M. C. A. Auditorium is a large one and all laymen who care to attend the meeting will be welcome. There will be neither admission fee nor collection. The meeting is held under the auspices of the Chicago Church Federation Council.

Metropolitan church has called to its pastorate J. H. O. Smith of Little Rock, Ark., who was pastor of the Union Church meeting in the People's Institute years ago. The Metropolitan Church contains many of the former members of the Union Church. No announcement has been made of Mr. Smith's decision in the matter. John D. Hull now of Portland, Ind., was the last resident pastor and the "pastor-at-large" has been Chas. Reign Scoville, for many years. The congregation now owns a leasehold on a theater property and has between three and four hundred members reported in the state year-book. The church at Little Rock has given Mr. Smith a call to remain with them a second year.

On the evening of December 11, the pastors and Sunday-school superintendents around Chicago met to consider the problem of housing the Russian Mission. It was decided to form an executive committee by having the various central organizations appoint one representative. The Chicago Christian Missionary Society, the Sunday-school Superintendents' Union, the Cook County Union of the C. W. B. M., the Christian Business Men's Association and other organizations will assist in the enterprise.

Austin Hunter read a paper before the Ministers' Association, at the Y. M. C. A., at 12:30, December 14. The subject was "Religious Journalism." The paper gave attention to the strength and the weakness of our current journalism. At the following meeting there will be a review of Morrison's "Meaning of Baptism."

Education Day

Sunday, January 15, 1915

Charles E. Underwood, Treasurer Board of Education

70 Layman Ave., Indianapolis, Ind.

Addresses Two Lodges in One Day.

Hugh McLellan was back at his old home in Kentucky early in December and while there he was invited to make memorial addresses for two Elks' lodges, speaking in Richmond, in the afternoon, and at Winchester at night. He also preached in Richmond church in the morning of the same day. He is much in demand in Elks' circles for addresses.

A Dedication at Indianapolis, Ia.

It may be news to some that there is an Indianapolis in Iowa, but in this thriving village there has been built recently a Disciples church at an expense of five thousand dollars. Wm. J. Lockhart has been the pastor but he has resigned to go to Des Moines. He is being succeeded by A. L. Zink of Kearney, Neb. The church at Indianapolis was founded in 1854 and has had many vicissitudes. The present building is modern in every way and will be a great help to the congregation.

School of Methods in Missouri.

The southwest district of Missouri has been having a school of methods. One hundred and forty-seven students were actually enrolled for the short courses given at Springfield. Twenty-seven churches and Bible-schools were represented. The next session of the school of methods will be held in the vacation period either in Springfield or some other central point. At this school were Dean W. J. Lhamon, W. J. Clarke, Miss Hazel Lewis, Miss Cynthia Pearl Maus and others.

An Unique Christmas Gift.

The church at Enterprise, Kans., recently held an oyster supper and with the proceeds of the evening purchased a cork leg for an unfortunate man, who lost one of his pedal extremities while pulling stumps last spring. The local paper speaks in great praise of this act of mercy.

Scenes Painted for Christmas Pageant.

Central Church at Spokane, Wash., is arranging a very elaborate Christmas pageant, and for the event two large scenes have been painted for the stage under the direction of E. O. Knapp. The first one shows the flocks at night and the second the manger scene. With this background the Junior choir will present their program for the glad Christmas season.

J. S. Baum Helps Dedicate Church.

The church at Cadillac, Mich., dedicated its new building on Dec. 6. Their services were held during the day and in the afternoon the various ministers were present to present their felicitations. J. S. Raum, pastor at Sault Ste. Marie delivered the dedicatory address.

Ministers Help in Anti-Saloon Plan.

The State Board of the Anti-saloon League of Illinois met in the Great Northern Hotel in Chicago on Dec. 4. Present at this meeting were John R. Golden, state secretary of the Disciples, and S. H. Zendt, who is pastor of Second Church in Bloomington, Ill. The Anti-Saloon League did not approve a candidate for the speakership but did give endorsement of the Hobson bill in Washington and planned to make a hot campaign in the legislature for the four features of the state anti-saloon plan, county option, a blind tiger law, an anti-shipping interstate law and a residence option law.

Missionary Play "Everyland."

South Broadway Church of Denver on Dec. 6 had a missionary play presented by the children and young people called "Everyland." It was the way this church had of presenting the facts for C. W. B. M. Day. Miss Everyland goes to sleep and in her sleep the various nations come to call on her. She awakens and finds that her dream is true. She introduces all of them and they show how they greet each other in their home country, after which they conclude with a tableau, singing "America."

C. W. B. M. Day at Paris, Ill.

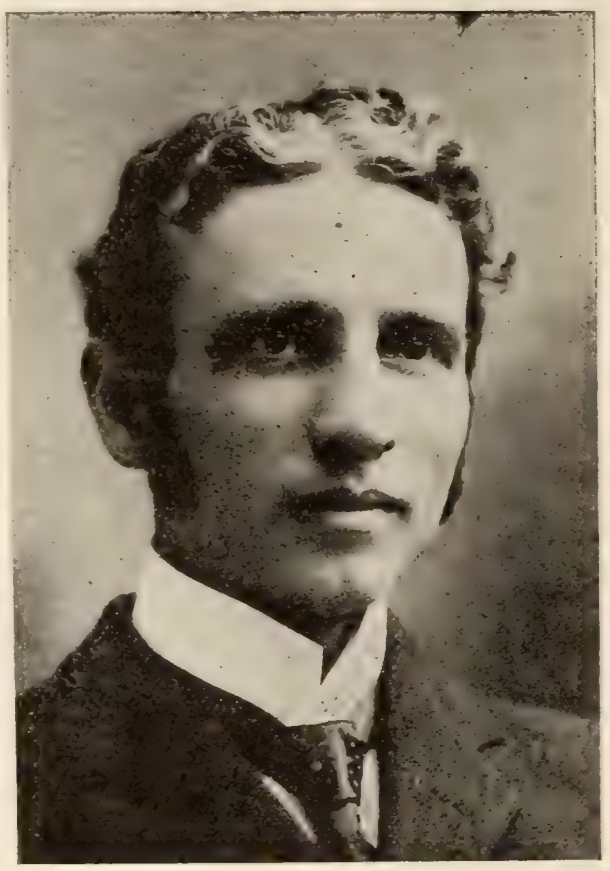
First Church of Paris, Ill., reports the best C. W. B. M. day for years. The auxiliary had full charge of the service and had prepared a splendid program containing considerable music. The ladies have complained from time to time that the men have not been as loyal to their meetings as they should have been, but this meeting was an exception to the rule. One thing that helped the meeting was the special effort that has been made by the organization for the past three months for new members. Fifty people have been enrolled and the membership is now 133.

Sell Theater Tickets for Charity.

The Arcade theater in Ann Arbor, Mich., has given as a benefit to the organized charities of the city a thousand tickets. The churches of the community are assisting in selling these tickets. "Rip Van Winkle" is the play presented. A bunch of the tickets is being taken care of by the Disciples church of that city.

More Preachers on the Pension List.

The Board of Ministerial Relief met recently and added two more names to the pension list, and the officers of the organization were ordered to send out the December pay without deduction. There is great demand for a further extension of this work and it is freely predicted that by October first of next year it will be necessary to carry 140 pensioners. The Board of Ministerial Relief is trying to find out whether the brotherhood wishes a reduction of the pension or an increase of receipts. The maximum pension is now a dollar a day for each family helped.



Dr. Geo. H. Combs who is conducting special services at First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

Successful Evangelism at Cedar Rapids.

Cedar Rapids church in Iowa has the distinction of having the president of the General Convention for its pastor, Walter M. White. This church has just finished a series of evangelistic meetings which have been very successful, E. F. Leake, pastor at Newton, Ia., doing the preaching. There were 48 additions, 45 by confession of faith. Every feature of the church life is in prosperous condition.

A Prize for the Best Essay.

Lenox Avenue church of New York, to which Geo. B. Stewart has recently been called pastor, has offered a prize volume to the person producing the best essay of three hundred words. The subject is: "Why I make it my business to attend the Bible-school of the Lenox Avenue Union Church. Why and how I expect to get others interested." Answers must reach the study by January 1st. The officers of the school will judge the merits. Everyone can contest. The best reply will be published in the "Disciple", the parish paper.

Build Parsonage for the Baby.

West Side church in Springfield, Ill., has raised money to build a parsonage to house the new baby that has just come into the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Ross, during the recent revival services in the church. Geo. L. Snively had come to town to help raise the church debt of $6,500 which had been a burden for a number of years. He found money-raising in this church so easy that he did not stop until over eleven thousand dollars had been subscribed, the additional money being given for the parsonage on the clever suggestion of Mr. Snively that they needed a home for the baby. The audience stayed at the church at noon, taking lunch there. In the afternoon, there was a fellowship service in which representatives of the other Disciples churches of the city were present to add their felicitations at this time of general rejoicing.

Jesse P. McKnight Leaves Pasadena.

On Nov. 29, Jesse P. McKnight closed his pastorate in First Church, Pasadena, Cal. He has been connected with this organization for a period of twenty months but in this time important results have been secured. One hundred and four people were added to the church by letter and twenty-seven by confession of faith. Mr. McKnight began his ministry in Wilshire Blvd. church of Los Angeles on Dec. 6. The Pasadena church will be supplied by Frank G. Tyrrell, a lawyer of Los Angeles, while they are looking for a pastor. No pulpit committee has yet been appointed. The Pasadena church was formerly ministered to by William Clark Hull of Chicago.

Geo. L. Snively Dedicates.

Flora, Ind., church dedicated a new building on Nov. 29. They had erected a twenty thousand dollar plant and needed $12,500 to complete payment on the new building. $17,450 was raised during the day and eight people came forward to accept the promises of the gospel.

President Wilson's Picture Sold.

First church of Quincy, Ill., has been having its annual bazaar. Among the things for sale was a picture of President Wilson and an autograph note from the president's daughter. The picture was sold at auction and brought five dollars. State's Attorney Fred G. Wolfe was the fortunate man to secure the picture. This is the church that recently called W. D. Endres.

Activity at Jacksonville, Ill.

Myron L. Pontius began his work as pastor of Jacksonville, Ill., church on Sept. 1st. This is a great church with a splendid modern and well equipped house of worship, and a large and aggressive membership. R. F. Thrapp had a long and efficient ministry here. Clyde Darsie ministered to these people for more than two years after Mr. Thrapp had gone to California. Recently on a Wednesday afternoon one hundred of the active men and women visited all the homes of the members. There was no appeal for money, just a social call. Following this there was a service on Sunday morning for the men of the church. Over two hundred men attended this service in a body and the pastor preached on "The Boy Problem." On Friday evening, Dec. 4., the men and boys of the church gave a complimentary banquet to the women and girls. The men and boys did all of the work. About fifteen hundred attended the banquet and about eight hundred remained for the entertainment. Two hundred and eighty-two men and boys were at work in the church at one time upon this occasion. It was a decided success and will doubtless be repeated next year. Attendance at regular services is unusually large, and there have been forty-one additions to the church during the past three months.

Getting Ready for Christmas.

Getting ready for Christmas is conceived at Fowler, Colo., church as being a spiritual exercise. A neat card announces a series of sermons for the first three Sundays of December on this topic. These sermons are "Christ, the Way," "Christ, the Truth" and "Christ, the Life." Jasper T. Moses is pastor.

Graham Frank Successful Evangelist.

The Disciples have long looked upon Graham Frank as a pastor and as a secretary, and now comes word of a very successful evangelistic enterprise in which he has engaged. He was at St. Joseph, Mo., for three weeks in the church of which C. M. Chilton is pastor and in that period sixty-five people were added to the church. Mr. Frank has returned to his church at Liberty to take up again the duties of his pastorate, and of the secretaryship of the General Convention.

An Ingathering at Lotumbe, Africa.

The missionaries at Lotumbe, Africa, report that there is continued growth in their work there. On Sept. 27., a class of 85 gathered at the river for baptism. The Christmas season will be a time of reunion and great joy.

A Daughter of the Manse.

A neat announcement from Niagara Falls, N. Y., tells of the birth of Florence Elizabeth Parvin, in the home of Rev. and Mrs. Ira L. Parvin of that city. The date is given as Nov. 30.

Pastor Advertises for Weddings.

An announcement appeared in one of the papers in Terre Haute, Ind., in which the genial parson at Paris, Ill., indicated that in case any young Hoosier couples desired to get married, the aforesaid parson would be found in the mood of one of Dickens' character, "Barkis is willin.'" The following was the text of the announcement: "Paris has a sure enough marrying parson—the Rev. H. H. Peters, of that city, has qualified. In less than two years he has married 92 couples of whom 22 couples were from Indiana. The First Christian Church of Paris, is a large organization of over 1,200 members. The church is located one block from the public square, and within a half block of the interurban station. The parson has an office in the church, and is ready to meet the young people at all hours. If people are determined to leave Indiana to get married they can do no better than to strike for Paris and look up the marrying parson."

Resigns After Twelve Years of Service.

Thomas A. Boyer has resigned his pastorate at First Church in Oakland, Cal., after twelve years in that field. This resignation will become effective Feb. 1. The church has tried to induce him to change his mind but he has decided not to reconsider. He was recently called to First Church in Portland, Ore., but refused the call at that time. "I have not decided," said Mr. Boyer, "just what my plans will be. I am desirous of remaining in Oakland and will probably take up other religious work which will allow me to make my home in this city and remain an active member in the church." It is possible the Portland church will renew their call. The church has been greatly built up in membership, and during this pastorate a new building was erected.

Butler Man Builds Church.

The church at Beech Grove, Ind., is ministered to by a Butler man, Don A. McKinnon. He is holding a ten day series of meetings which may result in proceeding immediately with a new building in that community. The church now owns the lot on which the church is to be built. The building fund was started by the Loyal Daughters, a Sunday-school Class.

Ladies Hold a Joint Bazaar.

The ladies of three churches in Berkeley, Cal., have recently held a joint bazaar. The churches co-operating were the Unitarian, Congregational and Disciple. The bazaar was held in the Congregational church which was the largest of the three edifices. The Unitarians and Disciples had charge of the sale of fancy articles, and of the delicatessen booth, while the Congregational women dispensed ice cream, hot drinks and a light luncheon. In the evening, there was a very attractive program given by Mrs. Raymond C. Brooks, a well-known child impersonator, besides other features.

New Building at Van Wert, Ia.

The church at Van Wert, Ia., has a new building at an expense of sixteen thousand dollars, although the building is really worth much more on account of the volunteer labor used in the construction. J. V. Coombs assisted in the dedication on Nov. 29. Half of the price of the building had to be raised. The amount was secured and the dedication ceremonies proceeded. The Methodist church of the town adjourned its services for the whole day to join in the happy celebrations of this notable achievement.

Preacher in Automobile Accident.

W. B. Crewdson, pastor of the church at Elliott, Ia., suffered a dangerous and painful accident recently. While driving his car to a funeral, the radius rod broke under his car and it went over, throwing him through the top. Three ribs were broken and his left knee was lacerated. It is now hoped that he may recover. He was in a meeting with his own church at the time of the accident but fellow ministers have gone on with his work.

May Preach to Prisoners.

The resignation of the chaplain of the federal prison at Leavenworth, Kans., has thrown that position open. Among the names most prominently mentioned for the place is that of H. E. Ballou, now pastor of the church at Osborne, Kans. He was formerly chaplain of the state prison under Warden Landis. Should Mr. Ballou be appointed, he will take up his new work on January 1.

Help Urgently Needed Today.

The National Benevolent Association is caring for the widow and the orphan, the aged and the sick in its institutions located in ten different states. So many new demands have been made on it during the past year that these homes have been kept filled practically to the limit. Add to this fact the fact of the present unusually high cost of living and it will be seen the organization has been having a great increase in expenses. The same conditions that have increased the work and expense of the Association have tended toward preventing its income from increasing sufficiently to meet the demands. The institutions are now entering upon the winter with full houses and an empty treasury. The condition is truly serious. The homes are now being compelled to refuse admission to many whom they want to help so much—little ones, aged ones, sick ones whom they should care for.

A Centenarian Disciple.

The N. B. A. home at Walla Walla, Wash., is the Home for the maintenance of which the Disciples of four Northwest states are especially responsible. They now have nine of these aged in the Home—two men and seven women. They are all quite well. Mrs. Todd, 104 years and 8 months old, is feeling well and is one of the most cheerful of any of them; is quick to see a point in a joke, and is great to carry a smile on her face at any little fun that any one gets off. She dearly loves company and especially enjoys the young.

Church Dines and Raises Money.

The church at Oxford, Kans., has been burdened with debt and recently they had an all day meeting at the church, the members taking their provision baskets with them. After the proper frame of mind was induced by preaching and dining, the members cheerfully gave several thousand dollars to rid their church of the debt encumbering it.

Kansas City and Vicinity

The Union Thanksgiving Service of all the Disciple churches in Kansas City, Mo., was held this year at Linwood Blvd. Church, and Dr. Geo. H. Combs preached the sermon. The service was well attended, and a splendid offering was taken which was given to the committee in this city which had in charge the raising of funds for the relief of the women and children in Belgium who are suffering so greatly because of the European war.

Practically all of the churches of the Disciples in Kansas City made the Every Member Canvass on Sunday afternoon, December 6th. Complete reports are not in as yet, but those that are in, indicate that the canvass has been in every way a success, and will result in much larger amounts being contributed by all of the churches, both for current expense and missionary purposes; the largest gain was shown by the missionary budget, which is of course, as it should be. The men are generally delighted about this introduction of more efficient and businesslike methods in church administration.

Two of the congregations in Kansas City are expecting to occupy new buildings in the early part of 1915. First Church at 11th and Locust, of which Dr. W. F. Richardson is pastor, will complete its new church and Sunday-school building, which will be equipped with many new conveniences and thoroughly prepared for carrying on the work of a social gospel in connection with the other splendid features which have always characterized the work at this place. The Linwood Blvd. church will occupy the Mary Atkins Memorial Hall which is costing about $60,000, and will be one of the finest Bible school plants owned by the Disciples in the United States; in fact, this church has come to be one of the strongest, if not the strongest, in Kansas City, which means, of course, as influential a congregation as the Disciples have anywhere in America.

J. W. Perry, President of the National Benevolent Association, lives in Kansas City, and his influence for all benevolent institutions is very much in evidence in this city. The Independence Blvd. Church, of which he is a member, and other congregations of the Disciples in Kansas City are preparing boxes of clothing, carefully designed and neatly made, which are to be sent to the Orphans' Home in St. Louis. This in a measure, is a new departure, since it is clothing the orphans with new garments specially designed for them, rather than sending to the home second hand clothing which may fit, or be a misfit. In other words, the President of the N. B. A. is educating the church to believe that the orphan child is entitled to as careful consideration in the matter of food and dress, as is the child who has both father and mother to minister to his wants and needs. John Ray Ewers Calls Church Recreant.

"The failure of Christianity," was the subject of the second of a series of "War" sermons by John Ray Ewers in East End Church, Pittsburg. The speaker declared that there was not enough power in the churches of Europe of all faiths to stop the war. He said, in part: Yes, Christianity has failed! Either that or else it has never been tried. At all events, there was not enough power in the churches of Europe, of all faiths, to stop the war. But the religion of Jesus has not failed. Love has not failed—but there is not enough of it. The cross has not failed, but men seem to prefer the iron cross. That brave sacrificial service which characterized the earthly life of Jesus has not failed, but Germany, England and France were sadly lacking in that element.

Preacher Fights the Sports.

The sporting element in Akron, O., recently put on a boxing match in that city which was in reality a prize fight though of the feather weight class. L. N. D. Wells, pastor of First Church made a protest to the mayor. His protest was overruled and the fight was allowed to go on. The mayor made the excuse that the protest should have been filed earlier.

Magazine Editor Lectures.

S. S. McClure, editor of McClure's magazine, and author of autobiographical sketches that have appeared lately in that magazine, lectured recently in Central Church, Denver, where G. B. Van Arsdall is pastor. His subject was "The Making of a Magazine." He appeared under the auspices of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae of Denver. His lecture was pronounced humorous, serious, natural and whimsical, with not a dry spot in it.

R. P. McPherson Goes West.

R. P. McPherson who has been pastor of the church at Dunkirk, N. Y., for the past five years, has accepted a call to Central Park Church in Topeka, to succeed R. C. Harding. Mr. McPherson began five years ago with ten or twelve people meeting in a barren and unused room. It is today one of the largest congregations in Dunkirk and has a handsome brick building on the avenue of churches.

Lectures on War Zone.

Roger T. Nooe, pastor of Frankfort, Ky., church was in the war zone when the present European conflict broke out, and he lectured in the court-house at Shelbyville recently under the auspices of the Woman's Club, on "The Impressions Received While in the War Zone."

All-Day County Celebration.

"Gallatin County Day" was observed by the Disciples church at Belgrade, Mont., on Nov. 29. The morning meeting was held in the Baptist church and Mr. Horn of Eugene, Ore., spoke. The afternoon meeting was in the Odd Fellows Hall and A. L. Chapman, of Bozeman, spoke. A mixed quartette from Bozeman accompanied the visiting minister.

Church has Pseudo-Newspaper.

As a form of entertainment, South Side Church of Billings, Mont., has an evening when the neighborhood gathers to hear the reading of the South Side News, a fictitious paper with items of news of greater or less degree of accuracy. The form of entertainment is said to be very interesting.

Dr. Combs Calls for Holy War.

Dr. Geo. H. Combs of Independence, Blvd. church of Kansas City is holding special services in First church, Bloomington, Ill., Edgar DeWitt Jones, pastor. In a recent sermon, he reviewed many of the issues of the present war and called upon the members of the Bloomington church to participate in a holy war. The following is the text of his remarks: "If the press dispatches are correct, there was issued not many days ago from the chief ecclesiasts and heads of the Mohammedan faith the call of the faithful to take up arms against the heretic. It was the voice of the Mohammed of yesterday and of now, nourished and in force. Our call is no less imperative than Allah's. Our call is to a war that is wholly holy, not outwardly or nominally holy, a bloodless war of right against wrong, of the good against the bad, of the day against the dark."

Place Organ in New Building.

The church at Elwood, Ind., is just completing a fine new building and is now at the stage when it is installing a new pipe organ in its place in the recently constructed edifice. It was the plan to hold dedicatory services early in December.

A Reward of Twenty Dollars.

North Hill church, Spokane, Wash., special meetings are going on under the leadership of Ellis B. Harris. He announced for one evening of his series of meetings that a reward of twenty dollars would be given for a correct answer to a certain question which he would propound.

C. G. Brelos Preaches Funeral Sermon.

C. G. Brelos, pastor of First church, Waukegan, Ill., was recently called upon to officiate at the funeral of a Mrs. Waterbury, the wife of the Congregational pastor of the city. All of the local pastors were present and took some part in the service. The local paper published the sermon in full and called it the most appropriate for such an occasion that had been heard in Waukegan for a long time.

Convention Address in Tract Form.

The address of L. N. D. Wells of Akron, O., at the Atlanta convention has been placed in tract form by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. The subject of the address was "God's Will for the Minister as a Missionary Leader." There are fifteen pages in the text and the back page of the booklet is given to excerpts which are called "Sparks From the Foregoing Address." The tract can be secured from the Foreign Christian Missionary Society of Cincinnati, O.

Church Buys Methodist Property.

Princeton, Mo., church has purchased the old M. E. church property of their city and also some adjoining land. The old building will be razed and one of the finest church buildings in the town will be constructed.

Laymen Reorganize a Church.

Two members of the church at Hutchinson, Kans., held meetings in Sterling, Kans., recently and reorganized a church that had been disbanded. The Sterling church had a building out of debt but the membership had been badly scattered, and had been weakened through removals.

News from the Foreign Society

The Great War has very much affected the trade of India. Exports and imports have both been reduced. Money is being raised to assist the families of those men who have gone to Europe to take part in the war.

Mrs. M. B. Madden of Osaka, Japan, is in a poor state of health, and some are of the opinion she should return to America for a time to recuperate.

Rev. Herbert Smith, missionary at Lotumba, Africa, who reports that the work there will probably become self-supporting in a short time.

W. L. Burner reports 13 baptisms at Manguito, near Matanzas, Cuba. This point is much in need of a chapel that will cost five or six hundred dollars.

Good news continues to come from Africa. Hundreds of baptisms are reported. The missionaries are active and the results under God are most encouraging.

The receipts of the Foreign Society for the month of November amounted to only $3,068, a loss for the corresponding month one year ago of $19,163. Last year a large Annuity gift was received in November.

Since the Foreign Society was organized nearly forty years ago 351 missionaries have been appointed and sent far hence to the mission fields. A number of these sleep beneath heathen soil. Some have returned broken in health. A mighty host still remain to do battle for the Lord.

W. R. Holder, from the Congo, recently visited the church at Colorado Springs, Col., which is supporting his work in Africa. He was much pleased with the spirit of the church and of S. E. Brewster, the pastor. They gave him much encouragement.

The Commission to the mission fields in the Far East sailed from Yokohama the 12th, and are due to reach Honolulu the 22nd and San Francisco the 28th. Their boat is the S. S. "Mongolia." Any communications directed to them at San Francisco, care that boat will reach them safely.

In the future the church at Beaver Creek, Md., will support Mrs. D. C. McCallum at Vigan, P. I. She is the Living-Link of that church. H. W. King is the minister.

H. C. Hobgood, missionary of the Foreign Society on the Congo, has recently made an extended preaching tour of ten weeks. He covered about 500 miles. Territory never before visited by a missionary was included. Mr. Longomo and his wife accompanied the missionary and helped in the preaching and teaching. It was a wonderful trip. The number of baptisms on this tour was 405.

Dr. G. E. Miller and wife and child, and Mr. and Mrs. Ray E. Rice, sail on the S. S. "Baltic" December 23 from New York for India. They take boats from England on January 2. They will be a source of great encouragement to the workers in India.

Herbert Smith, writing from Lotumbe, Africa, says: "At Tumba, the place where R. Ray Eldred lies buried, the work is in excellent progress. The approach to Tumba is up the crookedest river I know of. It is necessary to pass over swamps by the method of fallen trees. In such a place Mr. Eldred lies buried. It seems out of the way but it is among the people. His grave is near the church and near the evangelists' house. Since no living voice of a white missionary can direct the growing church at Tumba, the Lord himself placed his seal there by burying his worker where the living could not work. Tumba has been led by the native evangelist—Ndemboji during the year. There is every prospect of this work becoming self-supporting in the near future."

The missionaries had expected a decline in the work on the Congo on account of the Great War. They have been agreeably surprised. At a recent conference at Bolenge a great number came from round about stations. There were 471 in Sunday-school on October 4, and 102 were baptized the same day.

A. F. Hensey says: "Last Christmas we baptized a deaf and dumb woman from the village of Ifeko. At a recent conference another woman was baptized from her village, also deaf and dumb. How she taught her afflicted sister no one knows."

F. M. RAINS, Secretary.

Pastors Exchange Evangelism.

P. J. Rice of El Paso and J. W. Kerns of Austin, Tex., exchanged evangelistic service this fall. These two men attended Hiram college together and are old friends. The meeting in each place continues for thirteen days. At Austin, the field has been gleaned recently by a union meeting under Rev. Biederwolf but there were 10 additions. In El Paso there were 22 added. While in Austin, Mr. Rice spoke in the chapel of the state university.

W. H. Allen Goes to New Orleans.

"MEANING OF BAPTISM."

On page 181 our author says, "Baptism itself is not a symbol, though it contains a symbolic element. The Book of Common Prayer has neither Scripture nor psychology to support it when it says that baptism is "the outward sign of an inward grace." Unfortunately the author is found in direct opposition to the Scriptures in his assertion. The Scriptures clearly teach that baptism is a symbol. David said, "purge me with hyssop and I shall be clean; wash me and I shall be whiter than snow." Psalm 51. David knew full well that the sprinkling with hyssop could not make him morally pure, but that this was merely a sign or symbol of cleansing. So in the New Testament when it is said we are saved by baptism, the meaning is that the baptism is only a symbol of moral and spiritual purification.

The marriage rite can in no sense unite two hearts, wills and purposes. This is supposed to have been accomplished before the rite is conferred, but the rite symbolizes such union. So in baptism, the rite cannot confer moral and spiritual cleansing or purification, but it is designed to symbolize such cleansing. And the symbol is as good when water is poured upon the head, as it is when the body is submerged in the water.

But the chief error of the author is the leaving out of consideration the use that Christ and the Apostles make of the word in reference to the work of the Holy Spirit. This seems almost inexcusable in treating of the "Meaning of Baptism." After all the real baptism is spiritual. Water baptism in any form is only symbolical. Jesus says in Luke 12:50, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished." In this he refers to his whole passion from the agony in the garden to the mock trials, the shame and pain of the Cross, until the final, "it is finished." This was a baptism of sorrow, pain, and shame.

"In Time of War Prepare for Peace"

This greatest of all wars fills all minds. Not only are there greater armies than ever before and more deadly weapons, but new modes of warfare in the air and under the sea. The paralyzing influence of war, also, is felt throughout the civilized world as never before. It is humanity's war.

Doubtless the United States as the greatest neutral power will have an important part in the final settlement, and it is none too early to begin the study of the underlying causes of war and of the conditions necessary to peace.

Cannot our classes do something to create an enlightened public opinion touching this whole subject? Note the studies for 1915 in Josiah Strong's magazine of social study

Character Talks

By Myron L. Pontius, Pastor of the Christian Church, Jacksonville, Ill.

Rev. M. L. Pontius.

SERVICE

One cannot bring forth a single logical argument to justify his existence upon this earth, except that he is here to serve God. We serve God by serving our fellowmen.

In the realm of nature when a thing does not fulfill the purpose of its existence, nature begins a process of elimination. We are told that within the human body at the present time there are vestiges of more than seventy different organs and muscles; muscles and organs that once functioned when man lived under a different environment. During the ages man's habits and environment have changed and these organs and muscles no longer function, and nature has begun the process of elimination with the result that only vestiges of the muscles and organs are to be found in the human body at the preesnt time.

We live upon this earth to serve others and when we fail to fulfill the purpose of our existence nature begins, within our lives, this gradual process of elimination, gradually destroying our higher faculties and finer sensibilities. The secret of the true life is to serve God by serving one's fellowmen.

"The Conquest is just what you say it is—'a journal of character-building,'" writes one of our superintendents. "The Conquest" takes itself seriously. That's why its readers take it seriously. Is the paper your school is taking one that emphasizes the things that should be emphasized in a Sunday school—serious Bible study, religious ideals and Christian service? "The Conquest" has as its aim not simply to give schools what they have been used to—small talk of school work; but to publish such material as will actually GROW CHARACTER.

These "Character Talks" form a regular feature of "THE CONQUEST," our weekly for Adult and Young People's Classes. Send for sample copy TODAY.

Constructive Spirituality

CERTAIN SPECIFIC THINGS ARE INVOLVED IN THE ADOPTION BY THE DISCIPLES OF AN EARNEST AND CONSTRUCTIVE ATTITUDE TOWARD THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

It is the purpose of the present article to suggest some of these. But it may be well to retrace the steps we have already taken in the current series, so that the reader who may have missed the earlier articles may have some background for this and succeeding articles.

It was pointed out, at the first, that in the soul of mankind there is today an increasing tide of passion for the spiritual.

The Church also shares in this new hunger for a higher order of spiritual life, but stands, for the moment, bewildered and unable to satisfy its own or the world's passion.

Disciples of Christ share with the rest of the Church of Christ in a wistful desire for a closer walk with God, but in their consciousness there are certain feelings of disappointment not shared by the rest of the Church, arising out of the failure to live up to the imperial spiritual ideals to which their birth and their history commit them.

Instead of building up a spiritual life of their own on the basis of their historic and distinctive principles, the Disciples have been content to accept as a standard the order of spiritual life obtaining in the Christian denominations and to imitate it.

Whatever is to be said of the past—in criticism, in excuse or in interpretation—it is now high time that the Disciples undertake earnestly and constructively to create an order of spiritual life within their brotherhood, homogeneous with their ideals, and which will do for the high enterprise to which they were divinely appointed what no argument or plea on behalf of a particular "basis" of Christian union can ever in this world accomplish.

The spiritual welfare of both the Church and the world call today for some group of Christians to undertake precisely this task. The logic and passion of the Disciples of Christ peculiarly equip them for it, and their devout and hearty acceptance of it will justify their present existence and crown their history with the benediction of God and the gratitude of mankind.

At this time it is our purpose to suggest some practical implications which the adoption of such a constructive attitude involves.

First of all, there must be no delusion as to the price that must be paid by those who accept so lofty a spiritual task. There is no short-cut to its accomplishment. It is no holiday adventure. It is not an academic intellectual problem. It will not be done by means of organization. No convention can do it for us. The task cannot be delegated to scholars or statesmen or experts. It must be worked at and worked out in the soul of each Disciple of us, in his own inner life where the well of living water springs up into eternal life.

It must not be for a moment forgotten that the thing we are talking about is a spiritual thing, therefore personal, therefore hidden. It is not to be evoked by loud crying in the streets, or by spectacular evangelism, or by artificial appeal to the emotions.

The spiritual life may not be purchased by these cheap coins. It comes high. God opens the gates of such a life only to those who hunger and thirst for reality, for Himself.

The acceptance of the spiritual task which their ideals logically require the Disciples to undertake involves, therefore, a profound and intense—and unique—consecration of their lives to the revelation and purposes of God, a consecration not satisfied with itself if it measures up to the standards of piety that prevail in the Christian denominations, but that sets its own standards, or, more properly, resolves in vital earnestness to take as its standard nothing less than the mind of Christ.

Piety has become conventionalized, stereotyped, in the churches of Christian Protestantism.

The time is ripe for a Christian community to form itself whose fundamental purpose shall be to find God afresh and to have original and, so to speak, creative fellowship with Him.

New and wider paths must be opened up by the free exploring spirit of such a community, paths more inviting to the feet of modern men than the conventional ways which the feet of past saints have trod.

It is no new cult that we need, no addition to the long list of erratic communities isolated from one another and from the great practical actual world. The times call for a Christian community, thoroughly and purposely evangelical in its concepts and spirit, but richer, more comprehensive, more catholic in its inner life as well as in its outer interests, than the smooth-worn piety of the denominational churches.

The Disciples are fitted to be such a community and to construct such an inner life. In later articles we shall state specifically why they are fitted peculiarly for this spiritual mission; we must be content now with dispelling any shallow interpretation of so deep-going an enterprise. Its foundations must be laid deep in the souls of individual Disciples. The forces to be employed are the forces of the inner life and these forces must be mobilized by personal wills consecrated to the holy will of God and in conscious fellowship with Him.

The constructive attitude toward the spiritual life implies a constructive attitude toward the Church and its activities. The sources of spirituality are within the soul, but the growth and guidance of the inner life are conditioned upon social fellowship. The Church is therefore of the very essence of the spiritual enterprise.

Of the criticisms that are today being passed upon the Church the most serious is this, that it does not minister, as it ought, to the inner life of its membership, but has come to be absorbed in the task of its own self-maintenance.

It is probably true that the churches undertake to operate on altogether too heavy a budget of expenditure. They are impelled, therefore, to resort to all manner of unspiritual devices to get money and to get people. All of which cheapens the Church and weakens its spiritual function—and in the long run loses both money and people.

The Church is the social organ of the inner life.

It is not a club. It is not an organ of political reform. Its direct contribution to the reorganization of the social order is small, even when it operates under socalled "institutional" forms. Other institutions exist to establish an objective social order of righteousness—the home, the state, perhaps the school, and many voluntary associations.

But the Church stands for the inner life, the life hid with Christ in God. Its activities and its character ought then to be determined by this its unique function.

A community of Christians taking up seriously the task of constructing a deeper and richer inner life must take with equal seriousness an independent and creative attitude toward the Church institution.

Its activities must be organized from the point of view of their bearing upon the religious life. Every meretricious and coarsening amusement, and many, if not all, of the now generally accepted devices of making money for church support must be put under the ban, that the social relations of Christians within the church may be carried on in simplicity, in refinement and with true inspiration.

The crass obsession of number-counting—in church attendance, in Sunday-school and in evangelism—must be broken, and a qualitative standard consciously erected. Instead of reporting how many were present, let the report tell what was done for those that were there. Instead of exploiting the number of converts, let the Church be conscious of what the converts were converted to!

Of all church activities the one possessing chief importance in its bearing on the spiritual life, is the service of worship.

But our space compels us to defer until next time the discussion of that theme and others.

"All That Is Within Me"

A Sermon, Stenographically Reported.

BY BURRIS A. JENKINS.

IT IS a refreshing thing, in a world of half-heartedness, to find now and then a man who calls upon all that is within him to sing the song, to do the task, to lead the life that is given him. So much of the work of the world, and the singing of the world, is lackadaisical, half-souled, that it is a genuine joy when we meet, when we come into touch with, or when we listen to one who throws all his being into the message of his life.

Herein lies the difference between great singers and ordinary, mediocre singers, that the former sing with what we call "soul," "temperament," "spirit;" and herein lies the difference between the great work of the world and the cheap, ordinary work of the world, that those who do the former cast into it all that they have of heart, of will, of spirit, and of power.

There are capabilities, there are powers, there are possibilities in all of us of which we seldom dream—capacities, depths that we seldom reach and sound. There is much of undeveloped raw material: much of fallow ground into which plowshare never yet has struck; much of rich, deep soil, and living, springing waters, into which the drill never yet has pierced: much latent force and capability, which have never been called into play.

GREAT TEACHERS SEE HIDDEN POSSIBILITIES.

The great teachers of the world realize this fact, and that is why they are the great teachers. They look upon the ordinary level of common men and women as divine possibilities that lie sleeping and dormant, as yet unawakened; and they do not for a moment dream that they put anything into humanity—these great teachers—they simply lead out what is already within them. So Garfield was able to say that Mark Hopkins at one end of the log and a student at the other, constituted a university. That great genius, Mark Hopkins, never put any power into a student's head—he simply developed what was already lying sleeping within; he poured his own soul so into the task, with a great joy he threw himself so into the purpose, that the student could not but respond. The young lad's own inner nature was drawn out of him—"educated," as we say, in the strict etymological signification of the word.

DR. HARPER AT YALE.

I suppose that one of the greatest modern teachers in America, was the late Dr. William R. Harper, president of the University of Chicago. At Yale, twenty years ago, you could have heard the echoes of his teaching amongst the students who were still in the institution. They said that that great, strong, powerful, enthusiastic spirit would lift them up out of themselves, and in spite of themselves, though he had the driest subject that any man was ever called upon to teach to a company of his fellows—the Hebrew language. He would draw upon the board a few of those ugly, scrawly characters, and then he would point to them, and say, "Look at those, gentlemen! Aren't they beautiful! Aren't they beautiful!" and they would lean over in their seats, and they would work for him four hours out of the twenty-four, until all the other professors in the institution were jealous of the amount of time that Harper took. And he did not give those men anything—he simply educated those men—drew out of them the latent capacities and powers that were already in the humblest and the slowest of them.

> "Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name." Psalm 103, 1.

Rev. Burris A. Jenkins, D. D., Kansas City's premier preacher, the remarkable growth of whose young church is one of the notable features of the city's religious life.

Thus also Jesus of Nazareth, the greatest teacher of them all, recognizing the latent capacities in men, had only to come into their presence, and with His great, throbbing, magnetic soul, touch them at a remote corner, or boundary line, and He could quicken them into new life; they responded to Him, in spite of themselves; and what lay sleeping and dormant and unexplored within them was immediately opened up to the light.

JESUS FOUND HIDDEN POWERS IN MEN.

He comes into the home of Zacchaeus, and His mere presence is stimulating enough for that hard, cold, practical, greedy man of the world to cry out, "Master, from this time forth I give half my goods to feed the poor; and if I have wrongfully exacted of any man, I will restore him four-fold!"

He has only to come into contact with the woman of Samaria, and speak with her for a short time, until she runs enthusiastically into the city and calls all her friends, and says, "Come, see a man that told me all things that ever I did! Is not this the Christ?"

He has only to hold a few moments' conversation with the polished, refined Pharisee, until he instills into Nicodemus a desire to be born again, made over, the lower vast riches of his unexplored nature expanded and brought out to the light.

The great leaders and the great statesmen have been those who realized the power and capacity of the common people. Abraham Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson are great characters in American history because, with their ears to the ground, they have felt the pulse of the great common people, have responded to it, have vocalized it, have put it into action and into statute, because they believed in the power and the capacity of the ordinary common man.

MAN'S GREATEST DESIRE.

Now, the greatest desire, I take it, of almost all men, is the fullest personal development, the utilization of all the force and all the capacity that they possess. The catechism used to read, the first question of it, I think, "What is the chief end of man?" The answer was, "To glorify God, and enjoy Him forever." I do not interpret that answer to mean that the chief end of man is to tell God how great He is, though that is worth while; to sing praises constantly to His name, though that also is worth while; but I take it that this pharse, "To glorify God," means what Jesus meant when He said, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples." The way in which we can best praise God and glorify Him best, is to bear most fruit, and so be the disciples of the Christ. In other words, to develop all the powers and capacities that we possess, until they become valuable and working in the world; to see that all the sap that is in our natures comes outward into bud and blossom and fruit; to make the most of one's self, and the finest of one's self, and, changing the figure, to polish and to refine one's own personality, until it shines with all the glory that it was intended to shine with when it was made to reflect the glory of the Lord, from glory unto glory.

UNEXPLORED DEPTHS IN CHURCHES.

As it is with individuals, so is it also with peoples and churches. Our own religious brotherhood, the Disciples of Christ—how they yearn for spiritual expansion, for a closer walk with God! Concerned about treasuries and church buildings, about controversies and orthodoxies? Yes, but only superficially, I am assured. Deep down in their souls, where the clear pure waters flow, they are concerned about nothing so much as close contact with the Holy Spirit of God. Already may we claim the beatitude of those who hunger and thirst after righteousness. Ah, great are unfilled, unexplored depths of immortal souls!

Out in Colorado somewhere, I am told, there is a little lake, the surface of which is scarcely ever fanned by passing breezes, so is it sheltered by crag and cliff and mountain top. Still as glass, it mirrors back the overhanging pine and blue of the sandstone rocks. It seems a very shallow little lake—you can see the bottom of it at any place, you think, in the clear, mountain depths. You think you can reach down and pick up pebbles all over the basin that holds that water; but to the bottom of that little lake plummet line never yet has gone! Is that not a picture of the human soul? So deep, and so profound that nobody ever yet has stirred its depths!

"But," you say, "that is not a picture of my soul. I am shallow, as that lake appeared to be. You can pick up the stones over the depths of my nature anywhere. I am not naturally religious, and I am not deep and profound. I am very ordinary and very shallow." My friend, that is the only heresy in life, not to believe in one's self, one's kinship to God, and one's inherent and yet unfolded and undeveloped capacities. That is not to believe in God who made us. Oliver Wendell Holmes says there are one-story intellects, and two-story intellects, and three-story intellects with skylights; and so there are; but there are none but three-story souls, and all of them open to the light of God! We are by nature religious.

LIFE DEEPENS THE SOUL.

"Well," says one, "if there are capacities and powers in me yet unsounded and undeveloped, I should like to know how to reach them—how to unfold them—how to expand them."

Life does this for us. There are two means at least by which we may develop the unsounded depths of our natures, or two kinds of means. These are voluntary and involuntary. Whether we will or no, the inevitable experiences of life deepen and enrich the soil of our souls. To go up against life, which for no one is smooth and even and easy, against the hardnesses and obstinacies of life, the difficulties, the perplexities, the trials and the sufferings of life, is to expand our capacities, to toughen our sinews, to develop our souls!

And here we have at least a glimpse into the purposes of the Creator in putting so much of hardness and of suffering into the world. We cannot see his ultimate purpose, but we can at least see the immediate result. It develops and expands men and women. It makes them better, stronger, more heroic, than they ever could be without. I never will forget, when lying upon a bed of intense pain, a friend of mine came to me, and standing by my side, took my hand and said, "Sometimes we do not look up until we are flat on our backs!" I never have forgotten that word. I never could forget it. Sometimes God has to send the iron down, down, down, deep into our souls before the strata are pierced where the living waters are.

PAIN AND THE DEEPER LIFE.

Doctor Gunsaulus of Chicago, who after weeks and months of excruciating pain, lost his knee joint, is reported to have said that if he could have the same high thoughts and exalted aspirations that he had upon his hospital cot during the days of agony he would be willing to go through it all again—yes, to walk to that distant city in which he had undergone his operation.

My friends, it is in the exquisite agonies of life that oftimes we slough off the mortal, material existence and look up into the sky, into the face of God, even as he scourges us, and cry out, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him!"

"Then welcome each rebuff that turns earth's smoothness rough;
That bids nor sit nor stand, but Go!
Be our joys three parts pain, strive, and hold cheap the strain;
Learn, nor account the pang! Dare, never grudge the throe!"

Sometimes over the sodded mound, and under the weeping willow, under the suffering and the loss against which one's soul rebels, and yet which is inevitable and irreparable, the soil of our hearts is mellowed, deepened, softened. The rain of tribulation fructifies the fig tree that otherwise might be cursed!

And then, sometimes, on the other hand, in the greatest joys, men's inherent latent powers are called into play.

Phillips Brooks is right, I think, when he says that in our highest moments, whether of sorrow or of joy, we naturally and inevitably call upon our God. In moments of stress and grief, we say, involuntarily, "God help me!" In moments of relief and joy and prosperity, we cry out, "Thank God!" Perfectly natural is it that our souls should come up to him in times of greatest exaltation. I have seen men, I think, humbled by great good fortune, men made hungry and thirsty for righteousness, through prosperity. I know that is rare. For the most part prosperity hardens a man, or a nation. Adversity softens and refines. But there are those who have found in their very good fortune, and their joy, the presence of God, and the feeling and the sense of God.

THE BIRD WITH THE BROKEN PINION.

Once again, involuntarily, the latent heroism and capacity of man is oftentimes brought about by his very sinfulness. I shall have to speak carefully here, but I am confident that many a man has been brought nearer to God by his sins, by his failures, by his attempts to realize the absurd—for, after all, that is what sin is—by his desire to do the thing that, in the nature of things, cannot be done; by his striving to get satisfaction through that which, in the nature of things, cannot and does not satisfy. I have seen a man brought broad awake by the shock of the thing he has done, and reclaimed, made over, liberated, set free, by his own slavery. I speak that word, though many a time I have been told it is a dangerous word, and ought not to be spoken. I speak it because I believe it brings hope to a sinning man.

"The bird with the broken pinion never soars so high again," was the old evangelistic song that we used to sing, and that I do not believe! Where would be our John B. Goughs? Where would be our General Booths? Where would be our Dwight L. Moodys? Where would be our St. Augustines? Our Dantes? Our heroes of the past? Birds with broken pinions, every one of them. Ah, my friend, I think there is hope for any man no matter what he has done, or how he has fallen; and I believe he can fly just as high!

Now, that is not saying that it is a good thing to sow wild oats. That is not saying, "Let us do sin, that grace may abound." God forbid! But it is saying that sin, itself, shocks a man broad awake, sometimes, and brings him to himself.

Jesus would not have put it into his parable, if it had not been true. The lost son, the prodigal, says Jesus, so significantly, "when he came to himself, said, I will rise, and go unto my father." "When he came to himself!" His best self. His real self. His profoundest self. His undeveloped self. When, at last, he called upon all that was within him, then he said, "I will rise and go home to my father."

ASSOCIATIONS THAT HELP.

But there are certain voluntary things that we may do, and experiences that we may undergo, which will develop, refine, unfold us, increase the fruitage of the tree of our lives. First, our associations, our comradeships, the character of the people with whom we have to do. Is there anybody in your acquaintance who, by his very presence, brings out the best that is within you? Anybody before whom you want to be at your best? Anybody with whom, in spite of yourself, you are at your best? whose personality somehow quickens mind, heart, will; tunes, intensifies? Then if there is such, lock him to your bosom with bands of steel. Never let him go. Follow him about, day in, day out. Take up your boarding-house across the street from him. Never let him out of your sight if you can help it. Make him your own.

"But," says one, "I have no such friend. The nature of my environment is such, or the natural reserve of my own character is such that I have no such friend. I cannot find him, and if I found him I could not make use of him." Well, Ruskin tells us that there are certain kings and princes waiting to associate with us, all the time, if we care to come into their company. They are gathering dust upon our shelves, and yet are ready to give us the best and the finest that is in their nature. Not the ordinary table talk, or made-conversation of the day-kings and princes of the soul, to speak to us! Seek them out, and avoid the baser lights. Above all, there is the King of Kings, the Lord of Lords, the Prince of Princes, the chiefest among ten thousand, the One altogether lovely, who is ready to be a friend to every friendless man or any man. That same great Teacher and leader of men that could understand the secrets of men's hearts, and draw them out to their best self-expression. He is ready to stand beside every one of us; to take each one of us by the hand, even as he talked to those two on the way to Emmaus.

JESUS IS ALIVE!

"Well," you say, "that is mystical, unreal. Jesus died two thousand years ago. I don't see how I can make a friend and a companion of Him." Jesus Christ is alive in the world today, more really than He was two thousand years ago! He is here, ready to associate with all sorts and conditions of men, to be a friend, to be a comrade, to be a saviour, to be a redeemer, to anybody that will meet him half-the-way. That companionship is open to us all!

The meditation upon him that this busy age seems to have lost, the moments before the fire, in the deep silence of the woods or the fields, the moments when we withdraw from the touch of humanity and turn our eyes upward, consciously and voluntarily to God; meditation which Ian Maclaren calls one of the lost arts, will deepen the soil of our soul.

Be alone. You have the right to be alone. The world has no right to invade your privacy twenty-four hours out of the day. Be alone, and think upon God.

OUR AGE NEEDS PRAYER.

And then, pray. Our age needs, as no other age has ever needed, to follow the example of the bewildered, hesitating, half-crazed Hamlet, when he said, "As for me, look you, I'll go pray." You see, here are the old, old exercises that humanity has found necessary in the expansion and development and the training of one's powers. Prayer to God—unceasing prayer to God. Consciousness of his presence—not petitions to him, but association with him, talking with him, on the streets, in the shops, in the stores, in the home, in the busy social circle. Everywhere conscious of and talking to God, we shall deepen the soil of our souls. The path is open before any one of us, and it shines brighter even unto the perfect day.

"Oh, that I might develop all that is within me! Oh, that I might realize the end of man, to glorify God, and enjoy him forever! Oh, that the unexplored, unclaimed, arid lands of my soul might be conserved and utilized, and given back to him who made them!"

There is the instinctive thirst of humanity. And it is the thirst that can be quenched in Christ, and Christ alone.

Christian Endeavor For Peace

A New and Important Forward Step Planned.

BY FRANCIS E. CLARK.

IF the phrase "the psychological moment" had not been sadly overworked of late, I should be tempted to make use of it in connection with the launching of a great Christian Endeavor movement for the promotion of Peace throughout the world. And yet the very fact that a phrase is overworked is one sign of its value and aptness. And surely there could be no more fitting time to launch a movement which will enlist hundreds of thousands, and perhaps millions, of Endeavorers and their friends in the cause of International Peace than just now, when cannon are booming along the river-banks of France, when horrible carnage is devastating the fair fields of Austria, when the blackened walls of the cities of Belgium tell of the awful destruction which war always brings in its train, and when the cries of the widows and orphans in six nations of Europe are going up to God because of the sorrow and havoc wrought by the fiend War.

Not that as Endeavorers we have done nothing for Peace in the days gone by, but that we can do far more in the days to come.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AND PEACE.

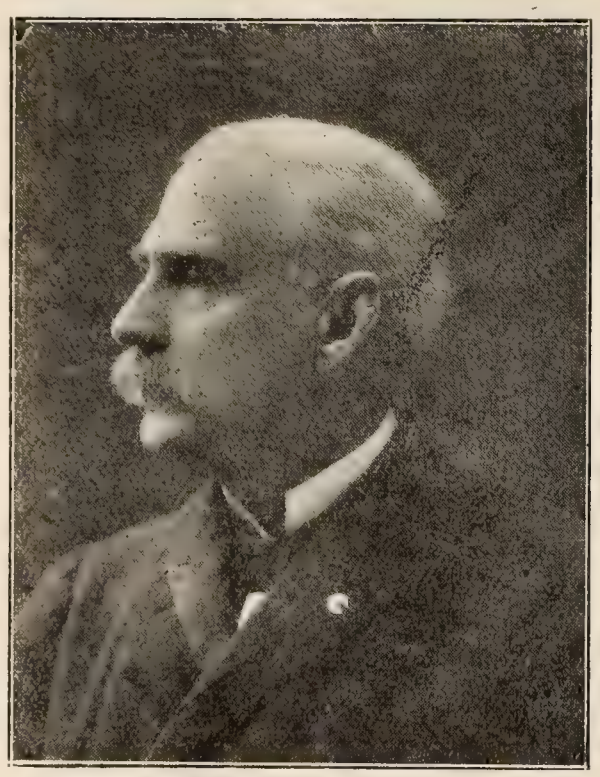
For many years the Christian Endeavor movement has stood strongly for Peace and Arbitration, realizing that the world can never attain its best estate until the blessed time foretold by the prophets shall come, and the nations shall "beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning-hooks," or, in more modern phrase, shall dismantle their forts and cease building dreadnoughts. Every great convention of Christian Endeavor for years past has rung with the sweet and strong note of Peace. Such men as Secretary William Jennings Bryan, President William Howard Taft, Vice-president Charles W. Fairbanks, Honorable J. A. Macdonald of Canada, and others scarcely less distinguished, have spoken on this subject, and have aroused within the hearts of Endeavorers a mighty protest against militarism.

Rev. R. P. Anderson, one of the editors of The Christian Endeavor World, at the great International Convention in Los Angeles presented an admirable paper on "What Christian Endeavor Has Done in the Peace Propaganda," dwelling on the influence exerted by its ideals, by its World's Conventions such as those at Geneva, Switzerland, when thirty nationalities were represented, and at Agra, India, where even more races and languages were heard; on the constant efforts of The Christian Endeavor World to promote Peace, and on the personal influence of a multitude of Endeavorers. He instances in this latter connection the fact that Mr. Edward S. Little, the treasurer of the United Society of Christian Endeavor in China, was instrumental in bringing about peace in China and averting a long and disastrous civil war by inducing the two great leaders of China, President Yuan Shi Kai and Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the first Provisional President, to appoint commissioners to discuss terms of peace, offering his house in Shanghai as a place of meeting. It is a fact worthy to be always remembered that this offer was accepted, and that the conference took place, lasting for six weeks, one of the commissioners and his staff being entertained by Mr. Little all the time, Mr. Little acting as middleman, according to the Chinese custom, between the two bodies of commissioners. "One might almost say," adds Mr. Anderson, "that the Chinese Republic was born in Christian Endeavor." Such, in brief, has been the attitude of Christian Endeavor on the Peace question.

So much for the past! What about the future?

WHAT CAN BE DONE.

The time has come, we believe, to convert the impression of the past into the expression of the present. We can, in the future, make war against war in a more effective way than we have ever done.



Dr. Francis E. Clark, who is promoting a movement to bring "good will among men and peace on earth."

Believing this, the Executive Committee of the Trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor at their last meeting voted to establish a distinct department of Christian Endeavor for the promotion of Peace. As we have a "Quiet Hour Department" and a "Tenth Legion Department," so for the future days we shall have a "Peace Department of Christian Endeavor." As tens of thousands of Christian Endeavorers are enrolled in an effort to promote contemplation and communion with God, and tens of thousands also in the effort to promote systematic and proportionate giving, so we believe the time has come to register the names of all who desire to unite in a Peace Covenant in which those who subscribe to it will promise to work and pray for this great cause.

WAR AGAINST WAR.

What society in all the world could more appropriately take up this task? There are a multitude of Peace societies of various kinds, and we rejoice in the great work that they are doing. But no other religious organization, scarcely any secular organization, has such widespread ramifications throughout all the world as Christian Endeavor. There are not only millions of Endeavorers in America, but hundreds of thousands in Europe, at least a hundred thousand more in Asia, and tens of thousands in Africa and the islands of the sea. There are thousands of Christian Endeavor unions where the young people of a hundred denominations in all the world meet together on a basis of fellowship and good will such as has never been known in all the past.

These societies—nearly a hundred thousand of them—have all the same principles, practically the same pledge, the same general lines of committee work, the same united efforts in their unions, national, state, county, and local, for the betterment of the world. There is a peculiar fellowship existing among Christian Endeavor societies, which for thirty years has been growing stronger and which is the chief factor in bringing the young people together in vast conventions in every part of the world.

What organization, then, since the world began has a better chance to promulgate the principles of the Prince of Peace? Denominational peace has been promoted among a whole generation of young people. The religious jealousies of the past will never again be known in the world. Christian Endeavor has had its large share in abolishing them. National animosities, I believe, will sometime go the way of denominational enmities, for when people get to know one another, and to have a common purpose in life, they cannot long be enemies.

A PEACE PLEDGE.

The International World's Christian Endeavor Conventions; the Holiday Homes in Great Britain, Germany, and France, in which are entertained Endeavorers from the different countries of Europe, and from which exchange visits are made back and forth by the young people of the countries now unhappily at war; the exchange of convention speakers between Europe and the United States, between Europe and America, between America and Asia and Africa—all these efforts toward a larger brotherliness and a better understanding have been promoted by Christian Endeavor societies for many years past.

And now let us put into concrete form these principles for which we have stood by each one signing, if he can do so honestly and with an earnest purpose, the following pledge:

> As a follower of the Prince of Peace I will seek to promote good will among men and peace on earth: I will work as I have opportunity toward the abolition of war, and will endeavor to cement the fellowship of people of all nations and denominations through out the world.

Everyone who signs this pledge becomes thereby a member of the International Christian Endeavor Peace Union. All who sign within the first year will be considered Charter Members of this Union. There will be no dues or fees with the exception of a charge of two cents to pay for registration, for the card of membership, and for the postage involved. No further charge is made, because we do not wish to prevent any one, however poor or young, from becoming interested in this great movement and from having his share in promoting it.

However, we hope that many individuals interested in the cause will give more than the two cents which the registration will cost, and I am convinced that many when they enroll will desire to contribute ten cents, twenty-five cents, or a dollar for promoting and enlarging the International Christian Endeavor Peace Union. Whole societies can enroll their members by sending to the United Society on a blank which will be furnished the names of those who would like to be enrolled, with the necessary two cents for each name, when individual cards containing the pledge and the name of the signer will be sent from Boston.

How many of our Endeavor hosts will seize the opportunity to enroll themselves in this great Peace Crusade? How many of you will be among the charter members of this new Peace Society, and thus be able to tell your children and your grandchildren that in "the year of the great war" you were among those who took an advance step to promote universal peace? Remember that all, whether old or young, who can honestly take the pledge printed above, whether members of a Christian Endeavor Society or not, are eligible for this Peace Union. On the simple brotherly platform of this pledge, which may mean so much for the progress and prosperity of the world and the ultimate triumph of the Kingdom of Christ, we invite all to stand.

SPECIAL PEACE PLANS.

In addition to the enrolling of a great host of Christian Endeavorers and their friends by means of a Peace Covenant, there are many other things which the Christian Endeavor Peace Union can and will do. Peace topics will be provided every year in the list of prayer-meeting topics used by 80,000 societies throughout the world, a special Peace program may be prepared for this day, and special Peace literature adapted to Christian Endeavor societies will be provided. This can be done, and the cause promoted throughout the world in proportion to the funds at our disposal, and may the blessing of Almighty God rest upon this new effort for the welfare of the world.

"Establish Thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish Thou it."

"Truth Stranger than Fiction"

A Human Interest Story in Which Dr. C. S. Medbury and a Well-known Magazine Writer are the Chief Characters.

DR. C. S. MEDBURY, pastor of the University Place Church of Christ, Des Moines, Ia., was chatting informally a few evenings ago with a group of newspaper men at the rooms of a Des Moines club.

Suddenly his eye rested on the name of a man on the cover of a magazine. He looked at it intently for a second and remarked that he knew the man well.

The name was that of Frank Goewey Jones, one of the best known magazine writers in America today. The sight of it seemed to open up innumerable associative memory tracts in the brain of the minister and he turned abruptly to the men with whom he was talking.

LITERATURE FROM PRISON WALLS.

"They say that truth is stranger than fiction," he said interestedly. "Most people, I suppose, take that adage as they do most others. They take it for granted and let it go at that, but sometimes it is true," and forthwith he spun the following yarn as he leaned back in a comfortable arm chair and toyed idly with the cover leaf of the magazine bearing the name which had attracted his attention. The story ran as follows:

A long time ago, several years ago, anyway, when Dr. Medbury was in college and was preaching each Sunday in Crystal Lake, Ill., a little town forty miles out of Chicago, he held a meeting one Sunday night and at its close baptized a boy of fourteen. The boy was Frank Goewey Jones. On the same night he baptized a girl of twelve.

Several years afterward he went back to Crystal Lake from Eureka, Ill., and married Frank Goewey Jones and this same girl.

The years passed and the minister went to Des Moines to take charge of the largest church there. Frank Goewey Jones came to Chicago, where for a time he practiced law. He had graduated from Ann Arbor and had removed with his wife to the Illinois metropolis. Later, becoming tired of the law practice, he engaged in the electrical manufacturing business.

A GENEROUS GIFT.

More years passed. Dr. Medbury's church and reputation grew. Frank Goewey Jones became a rich man.

One spring day nearly nine years ago the Des Moines pastor received a letter from Mr. Jones, who had enclosed a check for $500 and "instructions" as to how it was to be spent. A short time later Dr. Medbury toured the Holy Land. In the letter Jones had stated that he intended sending a check each year to be used by the minister in doing good. "But this first check," he had written, "is for you."

Dr. Medbury had hardly returned from his trip abroad when he heard that Mr. Jones had become entangled in financial difficulties, had forged a paper in his desperation and had been sentenced to a term of from four to ten years in the penitentiary. He was sentenced from Muskegon, Mich., where he was then in business.

He left his wife and a young son at home. They are there still, waiting for next August to roll around, at which time their husband and father will be liberated at the close of the four years. He will be pardoned and restored to his rights of citizenship.

"I hear from Frank frequently," mused the minister as he concluded his tale. "He has written his every story from the walls of the prison. He is paying every debt he owes. He will come from the prison a new man. He has fully consecrated himself to God and up there in Muskegon a little brown-haired woman and a boy of ten are awaiting his return.

AN ADAGE THAT IS TRUE.

"The experience has made a man out of Frank Goewey Jones."

Dr. Medbury shifted in the chair and threw the magazine back onto the table.

"I guess, that in reality, truth is stranger than fiction—sometimes at least," he smiled, and his auditors nodded their heads in unanimous confirmation.

On Marne Battlefield

Two weeks after the terrible battle of the Marne we went to Esternay to see the battlefield. Between Esternay and Sezanne, you will remember, the fiercest fighting took place. There the entire front of Von Bulow's army smashed into the French right wing and fought ceaselessly for three days; continuing a rear-guard battle as it retreated northward again.

BATTLESCARS DISAPPEARING.

In the café at Esternay where we had lunch there were several French officers, and the French commandant of the place looked over our passports and courteously directed us to the battlefield. In Esternay itself there was a hole in a wall where a shell had struck. It had been plastered up again and two weeks more of sun and rain would so obliterate the newness that one would never know that there had been any shell. The chief indication of war was that eggs and milk were still hard to get. And then there were flies—thousands and thousands of flies—which had come to light upon the dead and would be gone with the cold weather.

But already along the length of the battlefield a man driving a plow shouted to his oxen; already many scars of the shells lay under the brown furrow, nor could one tell where they had been. Even in the valley where the French infantry had reformed again and again under the awful fire, and where wisps of straw and a few tin cans were all that remained to show where an army had camped, new pale violet crocuses stood up from the exuberant earth like lamps in the shade.

Christmas in Belgium.

Jean—"Do you think St. Nicholas will find us, now that we haven't a chimney?"—New York Times.

For the plowing and sowing of the harvests, the swinging seasons—cold winter, and the stirring of the blood of the world in March—love and death, and the need of food and clothing, will be the only reality of their life.

Here in the fields were long flat mounds of yellow earth—traces of quicklime about their edges—where the dead had been dragged by the leg and buried: Germans and French together. One long mound bore a wooden cross hung with flowers, on which was inscribed: "Here lie forty-three Frenchmen of the 73rd Regiment of the Line."—The Metropolitan.

CONGRESS AT LAST FACES PROHIBITION ISSUE.

HOW they did make the welkin ring in the halls of Congress last Friday when for twelve hours the people's representatives debated the proposed Prohibition amendment to the Constitution!

The galleries were packed. The atmosphere of the place was electric. A giant petition containing six million names asking for the Hobson bill to be passed hung on the wall—a petition, according to Representative Hobson, six times larger than any that had ever been presented to Congress before.

Mottoes also adorned the walls. It was an unprecedented thing to see placards on the stately walls of the hall of Representatives bearing such legends as these: "Alcohol has More Victims than Tuberculosis," "Crime is Caused by Drink," and "Liquor Fills the Asylums."

The two-thirds vote necessary to put the issue before the states was not secured, but the vote went "dry" by a majority of eight votes.

That in itself is glory enough for one day!

The arguments against the bill were hopelessly weak. They were based on sheer technicalities, whether the national government should absorb certain police powers now in the hands of the states. But the big, convincing, human argument was all on the side of the "drys."

Representative Ferris of Oklahoma made a vigorous plea for the resolution. "I am for national prohibition because I believe it will do most good," said he. "Which tugs the stronger at your heartstrings, the churches that are trying to save your boy or the liquor interests that are trying to ruin your boy?"

Mr. Hobson said during the debate: "If the details of this resolution are not satisfactory, let us amend it. What we seek is a scientific remedy for a deep-seated scientific organic disease."

Mr. Hobson's raising of the question as to the right of members who hold stock in breweries and distilleries or are otherwise pecuniarily interested in the liquor traffic, to vote on the proposed amendment makes an issue we shall hear from again.

Probably the vote would have nearly reached the necessary two-thirds had not many members taken refuge behind Mr. Bryan's personality in the position that the liquor issue ought not be carried into national politics.

The prohibition forces of the land have ample ground for holding Mr. Bryan responsible for the loss of many votes that otherwise would have been cast in favor of the submission of the amendment to the people.

But the sentiment of the hour is not one of vindictiveness or threatening or disappointment, but of joy and gratitude and resolution for the victory that is so surely in sight.

TURKEY AND THE WAR.

NEWS comes very slowly from Syria. But each new item makes clearer the fact that the Turkish people, that is, the population of the empire, composed of many nationalities, had no wish to become involved in the war, and prayed constantly to be left alone.

"But," says one correspondent, "the war party in Turkey, with Enver Pasha as the leader, had already compromised the Turkish government by its undisguised sympathy with Germany, and its reckless desire to take the gambler's chance and enter the strife with the hope of concealing their internal troubles, of winning something in the direction of the Balkan States which would unite the Moslems and if possible bolster their waning prestige all over the world."

Still further this friend writes:

> Vienna has always been reckoned "the devils bellows" by means of which the fires of fanaticism and unrest have been fanned for decades in the Balkan peninsula. In order to fan the already smouldering fires into flame, there followed the most outrageous campaign of lies that has probably ever occurred in human history. The German armies reached Paris at least a hundred times while the cause of the Allies was represented as defeated and hopeless; mutinies were reported among the troops in Egypt; Persia was invaded by the Russians; Turkish troops were reported in hundreds of thousands on the boders of Egypt; India was torn by dissensions; and every possible passion was appealed to which might cause war between Turkey and Great Britain. It seemed as though nothing had been left unsaid or undone that would induce or irritate or force Great Britain into declaring war on Turkey.

The result has been the forcing of Turkey into the war, against the wishes and the protests of all save a small minority of the official class. The suffering that has resulted is incalculable.

> Day after day hundreds and thousands, old and young, men, women and children fled from Beirut crowding the trains up the mountains into the plains of Caelo Syria and all the regions to Damascus. This has continued for at least ten days and is still in progress. We have done our best to comfort and allay alarm but the campaign of lies which preceeded this confusion and panic will require months to remedy and allay.

"FIGHTING THE STARS."

WHATEVER else you omit to read in this issue of The Christian Century do not pass over Mr. McDaniel and Mr. Ewers on the Sunday-school lesson. These two writers, the former carefully lining out the text of the lesson verse by verse, and the latter offering a free interpretation of the lesson story under the heading, "Fighting the Stars," will make every reader want to get up and be a Sunday-school teacher.

The writing of these two men, in our unprejudiced editorial judgment, makes a little bit the most stimulating and helpful treatment of the uniform lesson now appearing.

EDUCATION DAY.

THE Board of Education is preparing for the proper use of Education Day, January 17, in all the churches that appreciate the importance of properly trained ministers, missionaries and laymen.

The attractive poster provided by the Board, and sent out by the secretary, Prof. Charles E. Underwood, of Indianapolis, gives a list of twenty-six educational institutions which are coöperating in the promotion of better standards of education among the Disciples.

These churches that are adopting the budget plan will not fail to include Christian education among the objects of their benevolence. Their gifts can be sent directly to the institution they wish to assist, or to the secretary, for use in the general educational fund.

But whichever plan is taken, and whether or not the budget method is employed, an offering should be taken for this purpose, and the results reported.

In a few years the income from Education Day ought to be a great sum, and this next date, January 17, ought to mark the beginning of such gifts in a host of churches that have not as yet coöperated.

MISSIONS AND THE WAR.

A FEW days since there was held in this city a gathering representing the missionary forces of the leading Protestant bodies, and reports were presented regarding the effect of the war upon their missionary enterprises.

The representative of the Methodist church reported that the effect of the war was only slightly felt. There had been an actual increase in missionary offerings, amounting to a very large sum. The only place in which work was seriously demoralized was in the European lands whose people are actually engaged in the war. There many of the pastors and breadwinners are in the armies.

The high prices caused by the war and especially the high cost of exchange in the Orient has caused great hardships to the missionaries in Asia. In China the feeling is very uneasy, owing to uncertainties regarding the perpetuity of the government, and the program of Japan. In Japan an evangelistic campaign is under way in preparation for the International Sunday-school Convention a year hence. In India the government grants to schools have been reduced, entailing extra expense to the missions, and several of the German societies have had to abandon work, and as far as possible the American Methodists have undertaken their support.

The Congregationalists reported their missionary work as not suffering. The greatest cause of anxiety is the situation in Turkey, where more than one-third of all the foreign work of the American Board is located. There are seven Christian colleges, several of which are in the war zone. In some instances the buildings have been taken over for military purposes. But the missionaries are staying at their posts, in most instances, and it is believed that neither the war nor the announced abrogation of the capitulations will affect the work of the Board.

The Presbyterians reported that Syria and Egypt were the only lands in which their work was seriously affected. There is little fear that the Jehad, or "holy war," will carry far. The Mohammedans under English rule in Egypt and India are unlikely to respond to such an appeal. But the plight of the natives in Syria, under Turkish government, is pathetic. Robbery of every sort is the order of the day. In Jerusalem and other cities food is very scarce, and fuel very high. The sufferings of the people, plundered by officials in the name of the government, are likely to cause revolts if relief does not come.

The Baptists report an earnest and apparently successful effort to pay off the heavy debt of the societies. The missionary work is in satisfactory condition. Instead of the cynicism and hostility which might have been expected as the result of the war among Christian nations, there appears to be an actual quickening of interest among the non-Christian peoples and a greater willingness to listen to the Gospel.

Disciples' missions are not affected by the war, save as prices and exchange are raised, and some of the missionaries who were expecting to leave for their fields have remained at home till a more favorable time.

The most critical situation was reported by the Lutherans, much of whose strength lies in the German empire. In their work stringency and retrenchment are the watchwords of the hour and grave anxiety is felt.

A Little Sermon in Green

By Frank Waller Allen

"And pray ye that it be not in the winter time."—Jesus.

WINTER—drab, barren, frosty and treacherous, has always depressed the spirits of men. It is true that in the dusty, hot, dry-throated days of mid-summer our fancy makes lovely the ice-bound streams and the white fields of snow. And even when the autumn comes with the sun's kiss left in crimson and gold upon each ripening leaf, we still insist that winter is beautiful and kind. Yet the thousand-hued landscapes of October prove to be but the hectic flush of the disease which foreruns death. The dreamed-of beauty wrought of frost is but ephemeral, while the stupid, seared face of the colorless, naked earth chills the heart and leaves an unnamed fear upon the soul. The fancied kindness, too, found in the coziness of the open fire assumes a meager value when, reminded by the north wind, one thinks of the cruelties of cold and hunger brought to multitudes of little children, women and men. The doctor of medicine, the sociologist and the psychologist all agree that man, physically, mentally, spiritually, is possessed at this season of the least vitality. It is a time when death stalks openly and impudently about his grisly task.

In olden times—so long ago that it is but tradition—men, realizing the fact of the heart's heaviness and the world's weariness during midwinter, introduced the festivities of Yuletide, using decorations chosen from the few things green the frost had failed to conquer. They garnered holly, mistletoe and the evergreen which we have named the Christmas tree. They used this bit of color, all the more beautiful because of contrast, symbolically. It told them that at least God never had forgotten to send the springtime; it whispered of April rains, the blossoms of May, the warm south winds of June; it sang the song of the grass, the crocus, the early violet. It was a song for flowers to work by as they pushed their way unseen through the cloud to the sun that they might smile into the faces of men. It told of immortality, of the birth of love, and some even thought they could see in it the significance of the Birthday that has made sacred to memory "the dear little town of Bethlehem"

Ever since that brave elder day men have continued, oasis-like, to bring the green of the gods into the desert of winter.

Life, for most of us, is commonplace. Each day is but a return to yesterday's routine. It is tragically easy to make of it only the business of securing the means by which to feed, to clothe ourselves, and to provide a roof beneath which to sleep. Our ideals, our dreams, our enthusiasms, are killed by the cold. Our love of the beautiful, our capacity for happiness, our impulses to be useful, sympathetic brothers of men, are blown away and we find life bitter and barren and ugly.

There is nothing more pitiable than to become an unconscious dweller in eternal winter.

It is the largest duty man owes himself, no matter how irksome may be the task of every day, to keep alive in his heart a love of things beautiful, to ever play with the wonder-waking children of the dream-world, and keep his heart aflame with human idealism.

To be of value to his fellows and endurable to himself he must own and tend a green and sunny garden spot on the happy hills of Arcady. When the work within his hands seems hardest, and the spirit behind it most hopeless, when the world looks gray and cold; when the winter comes, then blessed is he if there is a bit of green to tell him that at least God has never forgotten to love. If there is just enough immortal color to whisper of happy days to be, of old friends to trust, of undiscovered beauty, of faith made new and hope returned, then life, with all its sorrows, will not have proven futile.

Keep alive the Green. Tend the Garden. Beware the Frost. And mind you, though you may have been taught that the food and the raiment and the roof are of greatest value, I say unto you that the poetry, the romance, the dreams, the color of the gods, if you please, are most sacred. Is it not He of the green, happy Judean hills who asks you, "Is not life more than meat?" Aye, friends, garner the green and forget it not. Keep it in the sanctuary of your heart, for of all things it is life's most valuable possession. Amen.

Peace Meeting Promotes Unity.

A meeting of the Church Peace Union in Chicago was held in the LaSalle Hotel on Dec. 8, which accomplished the result of bringing Jewish rabbis and Christian ministers together in a common meeting. Among the well-known personalities at this meeting were Rev. Shailer Mathews, dean of the Divinity School of the University of Chicago, who presided; Rev. Frederich Lynch, D. D., secretary of the Church Peace Union of New York; Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, pastor and director of Lincoln Centre; Rabbi Emil Hirsch, of Sinai Temple; Bishop Charles P. Anderson, and Miss Jane Addams. Dr. Lynch said: "The church has not failed, Christianity has not failed. Many of our hopes have failed; but the fundamental principles of Jesus and the prophets have not failed."

Chicago Chinese Have Union Church.

Rev. Frank Lee is pastor of the Chinese Evangelical Church of Chicago which is supported by five Protestant denominations who give aid through the Co-operative Council of City Missions. Rev. Lee spoke on Dec. 8 in Chicago before the Woman's Home Missionary Union (Congregational) and declared the work he was doing had a double significance. The Chinese of Chicago are a shifting population averaging 5,000 souls, and many of them find their way back to China. If they return as Christians the Chicago church takes on foreign missionary significance. In the second place, the Chinese of Chicago are in some cases establishing family life and settling permanently in Chicago. There are eighty Chinese children in this metropolitan city of whom forty are already enrolled in the Sunday-school. Sixty women are to be found in the colony and they are now being reached by the Chinese Woman's Club and its worker, Miss Ling, a Chinese woman. The co-operating denominations who unite to support this work are Baptists, Congregationalists, Disciples, Methodists and Presbyterians.

Roman Dogmas for English Church.

The English Church Union held a meeting one evening recently at the Church House, Westminster, with the president, Viscount Halifax, in the chair. Mr. T. H. Bischoff sprung a surprise upon the meeting by proposing that the English Church Union adopt "six points" which would favor the Roman Catholic position. These were as follows: (1) Reservation and Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament. (2) Restoration of devotions to the Blessed Virgin Mary in public Divine Worship, "which will require dogmatic teachings of the truths of our Lady" (e. g., the modern Roman dogma of the Immaculate Conception"). (3) The right to substitute the Latin for the vernacular Mass service, or at any rate, to depart from the present English Liturgy to such an extent as to render it more conformable to the Latin Liturgy. (4) Restoration of Contemplative Orders. (5) A celibate clergy. (6) A frank and fearless restatement of our relation to the Roman See.

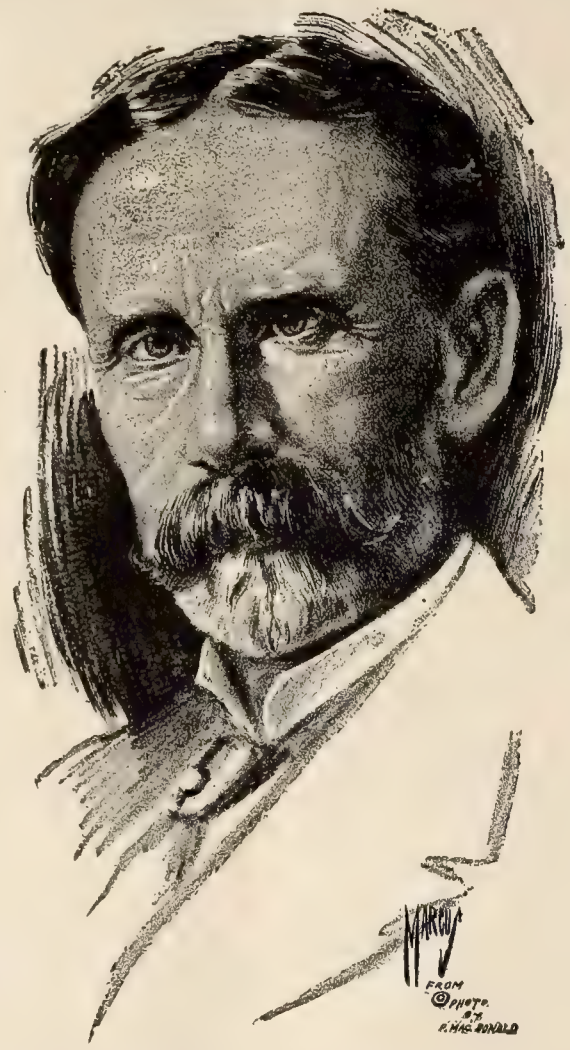
These propositions aroused a very earnest debate.

Asks for Abstinence During War.

The Archbishop of York in England speaking before the Council of the Church of England Men's Society, mentioned especially the temptations of soldiers. He said it should be regarded as an act of treachery to the state to treat with drink a soldier during the war. Civilians should be asked to pledge abstinence during the war, he said.

"Ralph Connor" as Chaplain.

Rev. Charles W. Gordon, D. D., author of Black Rock and The Sky Pilot, known and much beloved throughout the United States as "Ralph Connor," has volunteered for service as chaplain with the second contingent from Canada, which will probably join the Allies in the great European war. Dr. Gordon is a distinguished Presbyterian preacher.



Rev. Charles W. Gordon ("Ralph Connor") who has been appointed Chaplain over all the Canadian troops.

Dr. Len G. Broughton Called to Boston.

Dr. Len G. Broughton was known in Atlanta, Ga., as one of the leading Baptist ministers of the South. He is now pastor of Christ church in London. Recently the Clarendon Street Baptist church of Boston issued him a call to succeed Dr. Francis, and it is reported that he is seriously considering the call as he is home-sick for the homeland again. He has an unconventional message but his ministry is always marked by large numbers of accessions to the church.

Bishop Williams Visits Chicago.

Rev. Charles D. Williams, the Episcopal Bishop of Michigan, spoke before the Sunday Evening Club in Chicago on the evening of Dec. 13. Among other things he said, "I am afraid sin doesn't mean much to the modern man or woman. In their cynicism they say: 'If I am evolved from the anthropoid ape I can't be blamed for acting like a monkey.' Many a young man today is deluding himself through such an attitude. Some persons would say that this is the worst possible sort of a world. To them it appears a world filled with hypocrisy and deceit, greed and lust. They feel impelled to enter the common arena and grab right and left for money and position. These should remember that Jesus Christ lived in the same world in which they struggle today. But He never despaired. He saw in men the germ of the Kingdom of God. But this kingdom was no vision of pearly gates and gold-paved streets, but a heaven here on earth. What are you of this audience doing to make it so? This work of Christ will depend upon the individual. We may think of the apostles as marvels of original good, hand-made saints, but in studying their lives we discover their development through the influence of Him who led them."

Evangelism and Social Service.

That social service may be emphasized in an evangelistic campaign to the advantage of both was clearly demonstrated during the Biederwolf meetings in Watertown, N. Y., in November and December. Mr. Charles Stelzle was invited by Dr. W. E. Biederwolf and the local committee to conduct a social service campaign during the fourth week of the six weeks' evangelistic meetings. Mr. Stelzle opened up his campaign with a great men's meeting on Sunday afternoon, the larger part of the audience crowding the Tabernacle being workingmen from the mills and factories. Scores of men responded to the appeal to surrender to Jesus Christ. On Monday night Mr. Stelzle gave his address on the question: "Will the workingman lose his job and his personal liberty if the saloons are closed?" Although Monday is an off night during the regular evangelistic campaign, the Tabernacle was again crowded, mostly by men, although women had also been invited. Entire sections were occupied almost solidly by workingmen. "There wasn't a leg left for the saloon men to stand on," said one of the local ministers at the conclusion of the address.

Start Hymnal Campaign.

"At least one hymnal in every Methodist home in Chicago" is the new war cry sounded in every Methodist church in the city. Dec. 14 was designated "Methodist hymnal shopping day" by the Chicago Methodist Social Union. "Methodism does not sing as it used to sing, does not sing as it might sing and ought to sing," is the reason for the movement, according to the leaders. It is expected that parlor prayer meetings will be promoted by the presence of hymnals in homes.

Zionists Hold Meeting Over Small-pox.

Small-pox has developed in Zion City, where Wilbur Glenn Voliva, the successor of Overseer Dowie is now in power. A prayer meeting was held over one patient. The health authorities of the state have quarantined the city and forbidden any further public meetings until the epidemic is stopped. A druggist and a doctor moved into Zion City during the year but owing to a clause in Zion City leases, they will probably be ejected as they have been doing a rushing business since the recent epidemic.

Chicago Superintendent Resigns.

Rev. J. C. Armstrong, superintendent of Chicago City Missionary Society of the Congregationalists for the past thirty-two years, is retiring from his position this winter, but will continue in an advisory capacity for the rest of his life. It has been his proud achievement to make Chicago the leading city of the world for Congregationalism. The annual meeting of his society was held recently in the Auditorium Hotel, filling the main dining-room of the hotel. Among the speakers at this meeting were Rev. C. E. Burton, D. D., secretary of the Congregational Home Missionary Society, who spoke on "The Church and the City," and Rev. William E. Barton, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Oak Park, who spoke on "Chicago's Relation to the Progress of Congregationalism." There have been a number of changes within a year in the administration of the five leading Protestant city missionary societies of Chicago and Rev. Frank Anderson, superintendent of the Baptist Executive Council, is now dean of this group of able administrators, though in office for only five years.

New Testaments for the Soldiers.

"A million nickels from a million Sunday-school scholars for a million Testaments for a million soldiers in the hospitals, camps, war prisons and battlefields of the great war," is the present slogan of the American Section of the World's Sunday-school Association, in an appeal just sent out through the press to Sunday-schools of all denominations. The Executive Committee of the World's Sunday-school Association is behind the plan and will bear the administrative expense of the movement, so that every nickel contributed by every child will go, every penny of it, into a Testament for a soldier or sailor. On the European fields the distributing machinery of the various national Bible Societies will be used, so that there will be no expense to the senders and no overlapping of gifts. The World's Sunday-school Association will supply each child who gives a nickel for a Testament a pretty little souvenir bookmark. These bookmarks will be sent without cost in quantities desired to any Sunday-school superintendent who will undertake to use them in his school and who will write for them to the World's Sunday School Association, Metropolitan Tower, New York City. Remittances should be sent to Arthur M. Harris, Treasurer, at this address.

Boston Ministers Urge War Protest.

The Boston Ministers' meeting of the Congregationalists on Dec. 7 passed resolutions that had been offered the previous Monday by Dr. Geo. L. Cady, protesting against the action of Germany in invading Belgium and insisting that since the United States was a signatory at the Hague Convention as well as Germany, this country should make a protest. The resolution by the ministers stated that unless such protest was made the arbitration treaties would be regarded in the future as only "scraps of paper."

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON

Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

THE CHRISTIAN OBSERVER.
(Presbyterian).

A NEW BOOK ON BAPTISM.

It is a courageous man who will undertake to write a book on the subject of baptism in this age of the world. It is said that there are three thousand volumes in one of our large libraries on this subject alone. But the author of "The Meaning of Baptism" is doubly courageous in that he braves the seemingly impossible task of saying anything new upon this old theme, but also the opinions of the majority of his own Church, the church of the Disciples.

This work is unique in the fact that it dares to say that baptism may be validly performed by another mode than immersion. At the same time the writer advocates immersion as the correct mode of baptism. The meaning of baptism is found to be, not in the mode, but in the fact that it is the initiation into the circle of the followers of Christ, the ceremony in which one identifies himself with the Church of God. For the mode the writer goes back of the Bible to the custom of receiving proselytes into the synagogue. This he affirms was by immersion in water. He maintains that John the Baptist and Jesus Christ and His disciples followed this well-known custom, instead of the rite of purification, as is maintained by other Bible scholars.

Dr. Morrison sucessfully combats the position of Alexander Campbell that baptism is synonymous with immersion in water, and that the Greek word "baptidzo" and its cognates should always be translated by immerse and its cognates. He correctly maintains that baptism in the New Testament is a word of much wider meaning than the physical act of immersion. This is illustrated by several instances, and more could be adduced, in which the classical Greek words completely changed their meaning before the Christian Era. He says, "By baptism is not meant immersion, nor affusion, nor any other physical act whatsoever, but the moral act of uniting oneself with those who are of like mind with oneself concerning Jesus Christ." The personal act of commitment to Jesus Christ is the essential element, and the form is secondary. Therefore the writer advocates the reception into the Church of the Disciples of believers of other Churches without rebaptism by immersion. The reverse has been the practice of the Disciples ever since the days of Alexander Campbell.

Presbyterians readily agree with Dr. Morrison that the essential element in baptism is not the mode by which water is applied to the candidate. They have long maintained that position. For this reason they do not rebaptize persons who come to them from immersionist Churches. They claim that "baptism is rightly performed by sprinkling or pouring," and that immersion "is not necessary." The latter mode they regard as valid, but irregular. As we understand Dr. Morrison, sprinkling or pouring is valid baptism, but irregular. This position, it is argued, leaves the Disciples free to affirm that a Presbyterian church is a church of Christ, just as truly as a Disciples or a Baptist church is a church of Christ. Its baptism, i. e., its initiation, is valid. The worst we can say of it is that it was "irregularly performed."

The writer insists that "Immersion is the only catholic mode of baptism. That is to say, it is the only device which is everywhere acceptable in the Christian world. . . . Its practice does not offend the conscience of anyone." On the contrary, he declares that the practice of affusion does offend the consciences of those who hold the immersion dogma. Therefore immersion is regarded as an irenic measure and points to the solution of the divided state of the mind of the Church on the subject of baptism.

There is an evident fallacy in these statements. There is no catholic mode of baptism. As a matter of fact immersion is practiced by much the smaller part of the Church of Christ. It would seem to follow that the adoption of immersion would offend the consciences of many. It is wide of the mark to say that immersion is practiced optionally by practically all pedo-Baptist Protestant denominations. The truth of the matter is that it is tolerated but not approved by most of them, and the instances of immersion in them are comparatively rare.

This book has stirred up considerable controversy in the writer's Church. By many he is regarded as a heretic and is abused accordingly. However, in other respects the author is true to Disciple sentiments. The chief value of the book lies in its contention that New Testament baptism is not tied to any physical act, but is "the spiritual, social act of self-commitment and self-consecration by the individual and his induction into the Church." This idea, by the way, is very forcefully expressed in an old document that was formulated by the Westminster Assembly more than two centuries and a half ago when they said, "Baptism is a sacrament . . . whereby the parties baptized are solemnly admitted into the visible Church and enter into an open and professed engagement to be wholly and only the Lord's." (Larger Catechism, Q. 165).

EDUCATION DAY, JANUARY 17, 1915

The Visitor

A FEW days since I received a message stating that Mr. Samuel Higginbottom, a Presbyterian missionary from Allahabad, India, is in this country on an errand in furtherance of his big industrial and educational enterprise, which is at the same time a piece of missionary work.

It brought vividly to mind our visit in Allahabad, and several hours of most informing experience in and about that big city of Central India. A portion of our party had decided to turn aside from the conventional route of Indiana travel that usually takes the tourist from Calcutta to Benares, Delhi, Agra, Jaypur and so on South to Bombay.

Instead we decided to strike southward from Benares, the great Hindu shrine city on the Ganges, and visit our own stations at Jubbulpore, Bilaspur, Damoh and other places in the Central Provinces.

We took an early train from Benares, and reached Allahabad about noon. Arrangements had been made for our visit, and we were met at the station and hurried away in pony carts to Arthur Ewing College, one of the fine educational foundations made possible by the life work of President Ewing. He and his brother, who did a similar work at Lahore, have left names held in the highest honor throughout India.

Messrs. Moffett and Edwards took us at once to the college, where an assembly of the students had been called together. Into the large hall they came crowding until not a space was left, and then they filled the windows and the halls outside. It was a splendid body of young Indian men. They entered heartily into the worship, and listened with the closest attention to all that was said. Many of these students are Christians, but more are still confessors of the faiths of India. Yet their attitude is respectful and inquiring, and the caste fetters that have kept the youth of the land in bondage are loosening under the influence of education, athletics and Christianity.

The Ewing College at Allahabad is a noble institution. Its grounds are extensive, its buildings numerous and well constructed, its equipment excellent, though of course never adequate to its opportunities. The Presbyterian Church is doing a far-reaching work through the effective service of this college.

In the large and comfortable home of President Edwards we met several of the members of the teaching staff, and later were shown over the city, visiting the fort, the walls, and the curious underground temple, where once the mysteries of the Hindu faith were celebrated at shrines presided over by many gods, whose images are carved in the rocks.

But the most interesting portion of our visit was connected with Sam Higginbottom, as everyone calls him, and his farm across the river.

We walked down from the college to the Jumna River, which a little further down passes its current into the Ganges. At that point, just below the walls of the port, lies the wide sandy plain where a week later the "mele," or festival of the Hindus, was held. Here where the two sacred rivers unite, and where tradition asserts they are joined by a third stream, which mysteriously rises from below, there come hundreds of thousands of Indians for the celebration of their feast. During the days of that gathering this sandy and barren spot of land becomes a mighty city.

We crossed the Jumna in little flat-bottomed boats, passing as we climbed down the banks the hut of a fakir or religious mendicant, who has lived for many years there by the river, just back of the college, subsisting upon the gifts of the people in the neighborhood who look upon him—half naked, emaciated, and mostly crazy—as a very holy man.

On the further bank we drew up the boats, and made our way through the thick weeds that lined the river side. Then we walked for some distance across the fields, some of them newly ploughed, some in crops and some fallow. Presently we reached a square stone house, where several children were playing, and a moment later Mr. Higginbottom appeared and we saw for the first time the man who is doing so much for the farmers of central India. For he is the projector and leading spirit in connection with a school of scientific agriculture.

He has been working there at Allahabad for about eleven years. A graduate of Princeton, a Presbyterian and a Scotchman, he went out to India to be a missionary, hoping to work especially among the low castes, whose movement toward Christianity has been so notable of late. For five years he taught economics in the college, but increasingly his interest turned to the agricultural problems of India and its people.

Nearly 80 per cent of the population of over three hundred millions are farmers. But much of the land is very poor, and furthermore, it never gets its rights from the people, for the natural fertilizers are gathered to the last scrap for fuel. In many parts of the land the people gather but one crop a year from a soil that could easily be made to produce three or four. And eight bushels of grain to the acre is regarded as a good yield.

Mr. Higginbottom was greatly disturbed by this state of affairs. He felt that the government was doing little of a practical sort to remedy the situation. He came back to America and took a course in agriculture in the State University of Ohio. Then he returned to Allahabad and established his experiment station on land directly across the Jumna from the college. And for three years and more it has been growing into the favor of the people.

Two hundred and seventy-five acres were purchased. The land is poor, like much of the soil the native farmer has to cultivate. But the primitive methods of cultivation are pathetic. The plows are hardly more than sharp sticks. They do not reach the subsoil, and the farmer must walk interminable miles, driving his beast, to plow and crossplow, a single acre.

The western plows are a vast improvement over this. They go deep, and they cut a wide furrow. But how can a man buy these western implements who only has an income of a cent a day? Mr. Higginbottom saw the difficulty, but he solved it by the plan of co-operation, and now the farmers combine in village groups, and buy together the tools they cannot afford to buy alone. The cost of cultivation has decreased from four rupees per acre to an eighth of one rupee.

This eager and confident missionary, big and wholesome to look at, has become the master of the entire district. His word is with power, because he knows what to do. He took us about over his farm, showing us the crops of vegetables and grain, the old methods and the new, the silos for the feeding of stock, and the fine breeds of cattle and hogs which he has imported, and with which he hopes to revolutionize the agricultural life of the district.

And slowly he is winning his way into the confidence of the people. At first he had to hire all his labor, and the natives were suspicious and conservative. Now his help comes from students who are eager to learn the secrets of agriculture and dairying. It is hard to change the customs of people who have followed the same methods for millenniums, and no man knows more of the futility of trying to "hustle the East" than Mr. Higginbottom. But tact, patience and a boundless optimism are winning even in conservative India.

The most interesting part of our stay with Mr. Higginbottom was our visit to his leper colony, a mile or more down the river, on the other side of the big iron railroad bridge.

He told us when we first met him, that the children we saw playing about the stone house on the farm were the children of the lepers, whom he had segregated in the hope that they might not inherit the taint of the disease. Their parents are in the leper village.

To this place we drove in a carriage drawn by a beautiful horse that seemed the special pride of its owner, as well as the old Indian servant who had the care of it.

The village is really a triple stone compound. In one compartment are the women, in the second the men, and in the third, a more open space, a few married couples, not badly affected, who are permitted to live as a sort of inclosed community.

The stone walls which shut the unhappy people away from the world, inclose a series of colleges, and one large common apartment. The grounds are planted with vines and flowers which make the place a perfect garden.

It was delightful to see the regard and affection in which our big, genial friend was held by these, his dependents. He moved among them with perfect composure and familiarity, seeming to give no heed to any traditional danger of contagion. Many of them were objects of pity too deep for words. Their fingers were gone, their faces were marked with the ravages of the disease, and some were so terribly marked as to be most disturbing sights.

But here they are cared for with kindness. Each receives a daily allowance of food. They are kept out of the cities, where they would beg and be only objects of abhorrence. Beside all this, they have a simple, open chapel, where they gather for worship on the Sunday and all other times, and usually Mr. Higginbottom takes charge of the services.

In this way something is being done to care for a most wretched class, and to save such of their children as are yet untainted from the ravages of the disease. This leper colony is only one of the by-products of the agricultural station. But it is a splendid disclosure of the Christian ideal of service to the unfortunate, whom the native religions leave as under the curse of God.

As we left the place and bade farewell to Mr. Higginbottom, I was reminded of Dr. Macklin's work in Nanking, where, with his friend, Mr. Bailie, and other members of the mission force, he is setting in motion a far-reaching plan of colonization, which promises to put large acres of land into cultivation. In a somewhat different way he is bringing to the poorest of the people the values of the soil. And at the same time by the ministry of the hospital and its beggar ward he helps numberless afflicted people, lepers among them, to some of the comforts of food and healing.

To the people who are thus helped whether in India or China the gospel has the genuine significance of "Good news." and the spirit of Christmas—good will, health and sympathy—marks all the seasons of the year. H. L. W.

The Book World

A Department of Reviews and Literary Notes.

BY HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The Proof of God. By Harold Begbie. Well known to the world of books and Christian interests is the author of "Twice-Born Men." In this short volume, under the fanciful form of conversation and correspondence with a young skeptic, Mr. Begbie reviews the popular objections to the idea of God and presents a series of arguments, biological and philosophical, in the course of which he introduces a large number of quotations from eminent men whose testimony would be regarded as valuable. The treatment is helpful to people who imagine that the newer science and philosophy have displaced the idea of God. (Revell, 75 cents net.)

The Human Nature of the Saints. By George Hodge. Character studies in New Testament literature are always valuable if they serve to make the man of the Bible more human and approachable. Our chief difficulty in the study of the Scriptures is a certain tendency to think of the apostles and prophets as remote and unearthly. Dean Hodge has attempted in this volume a series of comments and interpretations which show as the title implies, the human nature of such holy men as Andrew, Thomas, Philip, James and John. An excellent homiletic help. (Macmillan. $1.25 net.)

The Man of the Desert. By Grace Livingstone Hill Lutz. The author of this romance of the plains is a well known writer of good stories. This one has the grip of love and adventure. The hero is a missionary, among the Indians of Arizona. How a rich and beautiful New England girl, traveling west with her family in a private car, was lost from her party, and found half dead by the stalwart and handsome missioner, makes a good beginning for a story which develops many episodes of interest before the consummation is reached. (Revell, $1.25 net.)

The Three Bears of Porcupine Ridge. By Jean M. Thompson. The writings of Kipling, Thompson-Seton and Roberts have opened up a world of new interests to both the children and the grown-ups of our generation. And anyone who can add to the grist from this same mill of nature lore, and reveal to us the nature and habits of the creatures of the wilderness and the forest can have our attention. This book is written by a lady who has prepared herself for such interpretation of the furry beasts by long tramps in the forests of the big north. The subtitle of the book is "Wild Dwellers of the Forest." (W. A. Wilde Co., $1.00.)

LITERARY NOTES.

The New Year of the Century Magazine.

The Century Magazine, beginning with the November number, the first of the new volume, is interpreting to its readers what lies back of the bare facts of bulletin and despatch. A notable group of Century contributors is engaged on this important work. In New York, W. Morgan Shuster, author of "The Strangling of Persia," and Samuel P. Orth, professor at Cornell University, will write of the war and its effects from an ethnic and political point of view. From London, James Davenport Whelpley, author of "The Trade of the World" and of recent Century papers on diplomacy, will contribute articles dealing with the personalities of the war lords and the spirit of the nations. Estelle Loomis, the brilliant short story writer, now in Paris, will be sending the Century sketches of vivid human interest. Dr. Hendrick Van Loon, historian and journalist, has gone to his native land, Holland, where he will write of the Lowlands in war time. Arthur Bullard, the well-known novelist and travel writer, is to leave for Europe in the near future with a roving commission from the Century Magazine. His mission is to help build the literature that will grow out of the war itself. In addition to its timely war material, the Century, during 1915, will have four notable serials—one by Jean Webster, author of "Daddy-Long-Legs," and, among many other live articles, a number of life-stories of "Constructive Americans," written by such keen biographers as George Creel, Harvey O'Higgins, and Harold Kellock. Mr. Kellock's article on George W. Perkins, "A Study of an Anomaly," will appear in an early number. The publishers, The Century Co., Union Square, New York, are making a special offer to new subscribers of the twelve months of 1915 for the regular subscription price of $4, with October, November and December of 1914 free, thus giving new subscribers James Lane Allen's story, "The Sword of Youth," complete.

Theodore Roosevelt Joins Magazine Staff.

The Metropolitan Magazine announces that for the next three years Theodore Roosevelt will write exclusively for the Metropolitan on all the great social, political and international questions.

The magazine was chosen after considerable thought because it combines the wide circulation of a popular magazine with a constructive, progressive editorial policy. In the Metropolitan Mr. Roosevelt will have the freest possible scope for bringing his views before the public. He will not, however, be in any way responsible for the political views of the magazine, nor will his articles be written to conform with these views.

The first article by Mr. Roosevelt will appear in the February issue of the Metropolitan and will give the true history of the acquisition of the Panama Canal and deal with the Administration's present attitude toward Colombia. Other articles will follow on such subjects as the Colorado mining situation, and its bearings on our economic policy, the need of military preparedness for the United States, the Pork Barrel, the Mexican situation, and other important subjects which can be dealt with by Mr. Roosevelt in the most authoritative manner. His contributions will be a series of great articles, each complete in itself and carrying the weight of his wide and intimate knowledge of affairs. They will appear in nearly all the issues of the Metropolitan during the next three years.

"Our responsibility is very great because of our knowledge." "God requires of us to place ourselves at his disposal to do what he wants." "We need to cut loose from precedents and visible resources and reach out to the unprecedented and the invisible resources of God."—John R. Mott.

MODERN WOMANHOOD

Conducted by Mrs. Ida Withers Harrison

"Uncle Peter"

A STORY FROM LIFE.

THE only time I ever came in personal touch with our great and glorious pension system was through Uncle Peter, a Negro gardener who worked for me for a number of years, and I must confess that this experience did not fill me with enthusiasm for it. He had served in the Union army during the Civil War, and drew a pension of $15 a quarter. He was a decent, hard-working man, well advanced in years, and was perfectly reliable—except when the time to draw his pension came around. Then the possession of this dazzling sum of money seemed to uproot all his moral convictions, and he went on a prolonged spree until the last cent was spent.

I asked him once what regiment he belonged to, and what battles he had been in, and he replied:

"I wuz in Comp'ny B,—th Ohio, ole Miss, an' thank goodness, I wuzn't in no battles at all; I wuz cook to de capting."

Thus is the hard-earned money of the taxpayer dispensed to keep up the traditions of glory and patriotism in our great republic!

"OLE MISS."

Uncle Peter was the first person who conferred the title of "ole Miss" upon me, and I confess that I winced under it at first; though I knew that with the old-fashioned darkies, it was regarded as a badge of honor and authority for the head of the household, bestowed on the appearance of the first gray hairs. In these days when old age is practically eliminated you may deceive the world as to the lapse of time with Paris gowns and artistic coiffures—but not so with the inexorable darky of olden days. I remember walking down the street with a friend who was wearing a beautiful sealskin cloak for the first time, and was feeling very young and distinguished, and I could not but laugh at her crest-fallen looks, when an old family servant accosted her with, "Ole Miss, what time er day is it?"

A PIECE OF DUPLICITY.

Uncle Peter had one daughter of whom he was very proud, who used to come at times to do some special house cleaning for me. One morning, when she had promised to wash windows for me, she failed to put in an appearance; presently a small boy brought a note from her, in which she said that she had run off and married a certain horse trainer, and would I please break the news to "pappy."

I did not relish the mission, because I was afraid it would distress the old man; but presently, I went down in the garden where he was setting out cabbage plants, and told him as diplomatically as I could—greatly enlarging on the fine business prospects of the horse-training young Lochinvar.

Uncle Peter paused in his work, ruminated awhile and then remarked:

"I ain't keerin' 'bout him—he's good nuff fur Mag; it's the dewplissty of it, whut troubles me."

GARDENING BY THE MOON.

Uncle Peter was the best gardener I ever had. I have known few pleasanter things in life than to go out in the garden on a spring morning, and talk with him about the marvels that warm air and night dew had wrought on the flourishing rows of young green vegetables. He was a man of few words, compared with Aunt Mimy, whose vocabulary was like a torrent, but he was full of garden and weather lore. It may seem whimsical and absurd, but I used to think of Hawthorne's "Marble Faun," when the old darky would bestow some of his bits of outdoor wisdom on me; he was on such intimate terms with things animate and inanimate, and had a kind of sensitiveness to wind and air, to drouth and moisture, that made him seem to possess certain instincts that we usually credit to lower animals only. As a weather prophet, he could easily put to blush the whole elaborate machinery of the Weather Bureau. In his philosophy of plant growth and atmospheric phenomena, the moon was always leading lady. He had a way of cutting his eye up at the new moon, and announcing like an oracle:

SUPERSTITIOUS IDEAS.

"Wet moon, ole Miss," or "Dry moon," as the case might be—and the strange thing was, that he was so often correct.

His time of planting was governed absolutely by the changes of the moon; certain vegetables had to be planted in the "light o' the moon," and certain others in the "dark o' the moon." Potatoes were regarded as peculiarly susceptible to the changes of the fickle luminary; if it was too wet to plant them at the proper lunar stage in March, he would flatly refuse to put them in until the April moon had reached the right period. Every gardener knows what a fever such delays throws one into, but to have forced Uncle Peter to violate his convictions on this subject would have been almost equivalent to forcing him to break the decalogue.

FLOWERS IN HEAVEN.

Uncle Peter did not care for the flower garden as he did for the vegetable garden; he could make them grow and bloom, but he did it with a certain tolerant superiority, as who should say:

"What's the good of spending all this time on things you neither sell nor eat?"

Aunt Mimy, on the contrary, had a keen appreciation of flowers, and nearly every Sunday would ask "for a bokay to take to the cimmetrey."

I heard her discoursing to the old man on the state of his soul one morning, while he was weeding the aster plants, and I could see by the angle of his back that she was a sore trial to him.

"Yas, Lawd," she was saying in that sing-song manner she always fell into, when she was holding forth on religious themes, "This worl' ain't my home; my home's in heaven, whar dey ain't no drunken darkies, when pension day rolls roun.'"

Uncle Peter's back grew even more rigid at this thrust.

"Yas, Brer Peter, you'll better be gittin' ready to walk dem golden streets; you think yore flower garden here is fine, but jess think er the flowers we'll have in heaven."

"Don' talk to me 'bout no flowers in heaven," said the old darky, crossly. "I hope to goodness they won't be none up dar; Lawd knows, they's nuff trouble down here—I want some ress an' peace when I goes up yonder," and he shouldered his hoe and departed to escape Aunt Mimy's fluent tongue.

LOVE OF ANIMALS.

But the great passion of the old man's life was his love of animals. He used to milk my cows, and always raised the calves "by hand," so as to save the cream for the customers. This method involved putting his finger in the greedy little mouths, while he held a pan of skimmed milk up to them; at such times, a glow of tenderness would steal over his face that quite transfigured it. They would run up to him as soon as he appeared in the morning, and frisk around him, as long as he was in their pasture.

Presently, the town grew out to the large place where I lived, and it became the profitable thing to open a street through it, and sell it off in building lots. This meant, not only the passing of the modest market garden that Uncle Peter and I had run together, but the selling of the cows and calves. Now I do not know any harder or more exacting work than the care of milk and cream for sale, and I confess that getting rid of my little herd seemed like passing from bondage to freedom, so, when I sold them, I watched them driven off down the pike with unconcealed joy—until I looked at Uncle Peter, who was standing by me at the big gate; his eyes were wet with tears, and there was a break in his voice as he said:

"If I had the money, I'd a bought them heifers myself. Lawd, but I'll miss 'em mornin's and nights!"

I don't think I ever felt more callous, or cold-hearted, or more lacking in natural affection than I did at that moment, or more heartily ashamed of myself.

STEALING TO MAKE THINGS RIGHT.

When I ceased gardening and dairying for profit Uncle Peter had to take jobs from others. He worked a while for an Irishman, who failed to pay him what he owed him, and one summer night, the old Negro, whose ideas of ownership were as vague and eccentric as Aunt Mimy's, took the law in his own hands; he went in the Irishman's potato patch and carried away what he considered a fair equivalent for the money due him. Unfortunately, some one saw him, so he was arrested and sent to the workhouse, and it took all the influence the head of the house possessed to get him freed. Uncle Peter was appreciative, but he firmly maintained he had done no wrong. When he came to thank "the boss," he said:

"Ole Miss, that Irishman cussed me, and sent me away, when I askt him fur my money. The onliest way I could git it wuz to go in his tater patch, an' take whut he owed me."

"Serves you right, nigger, fur workin' fur pore white trash," was Aunt Mimy's comment. "I never works fur nobody but the quality, an' my money is in my hands every Sadday night."

UNCLE PETER IN THE HOSPITAL.

In Uncle Peter's last sickness, I used to go and see him every few days, and would send him a meal, as often as Aunt Mimy

DEBORAH AND BARAK DELIVER ISRAEL.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM LESSON FOR JANUARY 10.

Judges 4:4-23; 5:1-22. Memory Verses, 4:14, 15.
Golden Text.—The righteous cried, and Jehovah heard, And delivered them out of all their troubles. Psalm 34:17.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(4) Now Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lappidoth, she judged Israel at that time. (5) And she dwelt under the palm-tree of Deborah between Ramah and Beth-el in the hill-country of Ephraim; and the children of Israel came up to her for judgment. (6) And she sent and called Barak the son of Abinoam out of Kedesh-naphtali, and said unto him, Hath not Jehovah, the God of Israel, commanded, saying, Go and draw unto mount Tabor, and take with thee ten thousand men of the children of Naphtali and the children of Zebulun? (7) And I will draw unto thee, to the river Kishon, Sisera, the captain of Jabin's army, with his chariots and his multitude: and I will deliver him into thy hands. (8) And Barak said unto her, If thou wilt go with me, then I will go; but if thou wilt not go with me, I will not go. (9) And she said, I will surely go with thee notwithstanding, the journey that thou takest shall not be for thine honor; for Jehovah will sell Sisera into the hand of a woman. And Deborah arose, and went with Barak to Kedesh. (10) And Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali together to Kedesh; and there went up ten thousand men at his feet: and Deborah went up with him.

(11) Now Heber the Kenite had separated himself from the Kenites, even from the children of Hobab the brother-in-law of Moses, and had pitched his tent as far as the oak in Zaanannim, which is by Kedesh.

(12) And they told Sisera that Barak the son of Abinoam was gone up to mount Tabor. (13) And Sisera gathered together all his chariots, even nine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him, from Harosheth of the Gentiles, unto the river Kishon. (14) And Deborah said unto Barak, Up; for this is the day in which Jehovah hath delivered Sisera into thy hand: is not Jehovah gone out before thee? So Barak went down from mount Tabor, and ten thousand men after him (15) And Jehovah discomfited Sisera, and all his chariots, and all his host, with the edge of the sword before Barak; and Sisera alighted from his chariot, and fled away on his feet. (16) But Barak pursued after the chariots, and after the host, unto Harosheth of the Gentiles: and all the host of Sisera fell by the edge of the sword; there was not a man left.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

4. Deborah. The Hebrew Word means "bee." She was a woman of great force of character, and used it to serve her generation. Deborah was the moving spirit in the Israelite rising which overthrew Sisera (5:7, 12, 15). A prophetess. An inspired woman. Impelled by the spirit of Jehovah, she roused her countrymen to fight and in His name promised them victory. Lappidoth. It seems best, on the whole, to give this the interpretation of the text, rather the one, the meaning of the word would suggest. She judged Israel. The meaning of the verb suggests that she was judging Israel.

5. Dwelt. Or, sat under the palm-tree. The palm-tree of Deborah. It was probably the same tree under which Deborah the nurse of Rebekah was buried centuries before. The association of names is probably responsible for the idea that Deborah's home was in the heart of the mountains of Ephraim.

6. Barak. The word means "lightning." Hath not Jehovah commanded? The question which compels the hearer himself to make the affirmation is more forcible than the affirmation of the speaker. Mt Tabor is at the northern edge of the Plain of Esdraelon. It is a symmetrical rounded mountain having on its summit an oblong platform nearly 3,000 feet from east to west and about 1,300 feet north and south. Its situation and natural strength made it a most advantageous position for the Israelites in a war with the Canaanites of the Plain. Ten thousand men of Naphtali and Zebulun. Men were chosen from these tribes because their territory bordered the Plain of Esdraelon.

7. I will draw unto thee. Jehovah promises, by his prophet, to draw the enemy on to his ruin in the valley Kishon. Sisera, the captain of Jabin's army. A man corresponding to the head of our national militia. He was charged with the enumeration and enrollment of the men liable to military service. And his multitude. The infantry in distinction from the chariot corps, which was composed of men of rank and men who were also trained in the use of arms.

8. If thou wilt go with me. Barak did not wish to go to battle without the representative of God with him. The presence of Deborah would insure him Divine guidance, and give confidence to himself and his men. Great undertakings demand all of our resources.

9. I will surely go with thee. Deborah goes with him to the conflict; but forewarns him that the victory will not be his. It is not at all clear that the writer regarded Barak's urgent desire to have the prophetess with him as blameworthy.—Int. Crit. Com.

10. At his feet. Following him. Deborah went with him. To Mt. Tabor, an excellent position for Israel. see v. 6.

12. And they told Sisera. Some think that the "they" refers to the Kenites while others make it an indefinite reference.

13. Harosheth. This was the dwelling place of Sisera, 4:2, and the place from which he advanced against Barak. The Kishon valley. Next to the Jordan, the most important stream in the land. It drained the great plain and emptied into the Mediterranean at Haifa.

14. This is the day in which Jehovah has delivered Sisera into your hands. A note of victory was found in these words to Barak. They show a supreme confidence in the power of God to give victory. Is not Jehovah gone out before thee? See notes on v. 6.

16. Barak pursued. He pursued them to the gates of the city. It is not intimated that the city was taken. There was not so much as one left. Not a single fugitive lived to reach safety within the walls. Read the poetic account of the victory in chapter 5. This is the oldest war-ode in the Bible.

The Lesson in Today's Life.*

UNORGANIZED LIFE.

The Book of Judges gives us a series of stories showing how, when the people forgot and forsook Jehovah, they suffered. A group of heroes and heroines emerge from the mist of that far-away time to stimulate our loyalty to God and His cause. The Song of Deborah is usually considered more true to the facts than the more elaborate prose narrative. That is, preference should be given to the fifth over the fourth chapter. No doubt the particular reason why the people went back to idolatry, this time, was that they had intermarried with the inhabitants of the land. The sensual practices of the religious rites of the natives were very tempting and again and again they yielded. Here is the lesson of the danger of compromise.

Rev. John R. Ewers.

A SUFFRAGETTE.

Deborah, a fiery spirited woman, is the heroine of this lesson. Women figure prominently here for Jael is only less noted. The manhood of that day must have been very poor. Even when Deborah calls Barak, the sheik, and commissions him to lead the people against the intruding enemy, he only consents to go when Deborah promises to go with him. It is all very well to talk about the beautiful co-operation of men and women. It is also very smooth to excuse Barak by saying that he wanted the prophetess near because of her religious influence, but in my estimation Barak was a miserable, weak-kneed near-man! You may compare Deborah to Joan of Arc if you please but my opinion is that the manhood of that time was approaching the vanishing point.

TWO WOMEN.

The facts were these: Sisera, a strong and energetic soldier had organized the natives and had pushed the Israelites into a corner. No man was strong enough to arouse Israel. Deborah, sitting under her sacred tree, gave forth her oracles and at length came to judge the disputes of men. Her power increased. She was full of fire and spirit and no man could equal her in challenging power. She summoned the sheik, Barak, to her, inspired him with her story and finally promised to go with him to the battle. Thus ten of the forty thousand fighting men were gathered at Mount Tabor, where hidden by the timber they were safe from the chariots of the enemy. Then God came to the rescue. The nine hundred chariots of Sisera floundered in the mud, the river Kishon broke over its bank and drove madly through the plain, the mountains shook, the heavens thundered, the floods came, and Israel rushing out from cover easily repulsed the enemy until Sisera fled on foot, leaving his old iron wagon stuck in the mud. He came to the tent of one Jael. No clinging vine was she. She classed with London militants! She gave Sisera a bowl of sour milk and before he could lift it to his lips, she smashed his forehead with a tent-hammer. Strong minded ladies these! But they were better than the men.

CURSE MEROZ.

A good example of heroic manhood is found in the Meroz incident. Meroz was a little village, up the plain, in a strategic situation. If the men of that hamlet had crawled out from under the beds and haystacks when the discomfited followers of Sisera (remember he was fleeing) came through their territory they could have done much deadly execution. But they were cowardly and were as harmless as the average church member is today! Thus when Deborah, in her deep contralto, sings the story of the battle, she calls down curses upon Meroz—because they came not up to the help of Jehovah. I like that stanza of her song. It should be chanted in every church every Sunday. Especially it should be sung in Europe where a recreant church is responsible for the war.

FIGHTING STARS.

"The stars in their courses fought against Sisera"—another fine line. I tell you this Deborah knew a thing or two. The universe is built for righteousness. The stars fight for us when we are in harmony with God.

Board of Education Catechism

I. Q.—What is the Board of Education?

A.—The Board of Education is an incorporation with headquarters at Indianapolis, whose trustees are executive heads of colleges and educational institutions of the Disciples of Christ.

II. Q.—Why is the Board of Education?

A.—Because the educational problem among the Disciples of Christ has many phases which only a co-operative movement can handle, and no phases which cannot be better promoted in co-operation than by independent or competitive movements.

III. Q.—What is an educational institution of the Disciples of Christ?

A.—An educational institution which has all the following qualifications.

1. An institution with a good educational ideal.
2. An educational institution not run for private profit.
3. An educational institution which by historic associations, present day support, and frank policy identifies itself with the interests of the Disciples of Christ.

IV. Q.—When does the Board of Education make its appeal to the churches?

A.—On Education Day, falling this missionary year on Sunday, January 17, 1915.

V. Q.—What is Education Day?

A.—Education Day is the day in our Missionary Calendar that for some years has been used to promote the cause of Christian Education. It is the day on which the Colleges appeal for the dedication of life to Christ, and for money to educate these men and women for more efficient service.

VI. Q.—Why does the college appeal through the churches for these ends?

A.—Because it is through the colleges that:

1. The church educates her preachers.
2. The church educates her missionaries.
3. The church educates her Christian laymen.

The college then merely asks that the churches make possible a larger service by the college to the church.

VII. Q.—How should Education Day be observed?

A.—In the following manner:

1. A call to prayer that laborers may be sent into the harvest.
2. A plea for the consecration of youth to whatever field God and their talents may call—a plea that will send the youth to our colleges for training, and keep the home pastor and church his counsellors through the years of final choice of field and training for it.
3. A call for funds to educate the many youth who are now enrolled, and will enroll in our colleges. Use the weekly pledge system with a portion to Christian Education, or appeal for contribution to those who prefer the offering plan, or if no appeal for funds be made the other features of the day could be carried out without this appeal.

VIII. Q.—What institutions co-operate in the promotion of Education Day?

A.—Drake University, Bethany College, Transylvania University, Hiram College, Butler College, Eureka College, Texas Christian University, Phillips University, Christian University, Cotner University, Bloomington Bible Chair, William Woods College, Bible College of Missouri, Atlantic Christian College, Southern Christian College, Keuka College, Eugene Bible University, College of Missions, Milligan College, Disciples Divinity House, Spokane University, Phillips Bible Institute, Christian College, Drury Bible School, Missouri Christian College, Kentucky Female Orphan School.

IX. Q.—What additional resources do college executives estimate must be added in ten years?

A.—Buildings and equipment amounting to $2,700,000
Added income from all sources $550,000

X. Q.—What are the present resources and what the student attendance in these institutions?

A.—

The Mid-Week Service

By Silas Jones.

TOPIC FOR JANUARY 6.

In the Beginning—God. Gen. 1:1-5; Ps. 90; Prov. 3:5, 6; Acts 1:1-5.

In the writings of William James I find him quoting with approval these words of Mr. Chesterton: "There are some people, and I am one of them, who think that the most practical and important thing about a man is still his view of the universe." We think that for a landlady considering a lodger it is important to know his income, but still more important to know his philosophy. We think that for a general about to fight an enemy it is important to know the enemy's numbers, but still more important to know the enemy's philosophy.

For the majority of us the question is put, What sort of God do you have? It is more important to know what kind of God a man worships than to know that he worships God.

THE CREATOR.

"It is he that made us, and we are his," "exclaims the psalmist. For the psalmist it was a delight to acknowledge his dependence upon the Creator. In this respect he must be counted like all religious persons. There may be doubt, fear, fruitless searching after God, but God is found and he proves to be the friend of man; the soul rejoices in him as the author of its existence. Weakness leans upon strength and is satisfied when strength is exercised with wisdom and kindness. That he cannot understand how God created the world the believer admits. That the world perplexes him he admits. But he still rejoices in the Creator.

THE ETERNAL GOD.

With the thought of creation is joined that of eternity. The wise men may say what they please about time and eternity; the religious man has his views which he does not intend to discard out of respect to the eccentricities of the professionally wise man. The brevity of life and the reach of his aspirations impress him. He sings:

> Time, like an ever rolling stream,
> Bears all its sons away;
> They fly forgotten, as a dream
> Dies at the opening day.

But he does not stop with this stanza. He goes on to the next which celebrates God his eternal home. There is an abiding place in the universe for love and its objects.

THE PROVIDENCE OF GOD.

To believe that God made the world ages ago and then left it to take care of itself as best it could is not enough. We need God now. We need him every day. If we cannot have him now we are not likely to be much interested in his achievements in the past. The apostle expresses our faith in divine providence: "We know that to them that love God all things work together for good." "If God is for us, who is against us? He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not also freely give all things?" It is not by scientific demonstration that we bring God into our lives. "To know God is to trust his grace, adore his holiness, experience his blessing and his mercy, to abandon oneself to his power, to his wisdom and love." It is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ whom we seek to know. If we adore the Creator, it is because the Creator has the qualities we find in Jesus. If we rejoice in providence, it is because we feel that the world is under the guidance of eternal goodness and love.

Ps. 8:3-6; 97:6; Ecc. 3:14-15; Amos 5:8; Rom. 1:19-20; 1 Chron. 16:26; Job. 12:7-9; 38:4-7, 8; Ps. 24:1-2; 89:11, 47; Prov. 22:2; Is. 40:12, 26, 28; Acts 17:24-26; Heb. 11:3, 10; Dt. 33:27.

Disciples Table Talk

Progress at Richmond, Ind.

The church at Richmond, Ind., has made splendid growth the past year under the pastoral care of L. E. Murray. The treasurer reported at the annual meeting on December 3, that the church had raised $4,000 the past year of which $500 was given to missions. It was reported that 158 new members had been received into the church during the year and that the present membership is 562. The pastor has evidently been busy for it was indicated that he had made 945 calls during the year and that he had conducted nineteen funerals and performed fifteen weddings.

The ministers of southern California meet in Los Angeles the first Monday in every month. Each member pays fifty cents per month in dues and the carfare of those living farthest away is paid from the common treasury. The third Monday of each month the ministers of Los Angeles have an additional meeting. The meeting of December 7 had for speakers and subjects the following: "The Arch Heresy in the Church," by Wm. Bryan, Tex., has Been Paying Debts.

James N. Thomas is just closing a six year ministry at Bryan, Tex., to go to Ottawa, Kans. When he took the work in Bryan, there was a church debt of five thousand dollars which has been reduced to nine hundred dollars. The church has formed the habit of taking the missionary offerings, averaging three to four hundred dollars a year. The pastorate has been a fruitful one in many ways.

College Professors are Injured.

Two professors of Texas Christian University have recently had a thrilling accident in a street car. They were on a Forest Park car when it jumped the track. Prof. Clinton Lockhart was plunged head first through a window into the iron bars and was badly hurt. Prof. E. R. Cockrell was cut in the face by flying glass. Both are getting well again and are to be congratulated upon their narrow escape.

Charles F. Hutslar has been pastor at Broadway church, Los Angeles, Cal., for six months. In that period, 91 have been added to the church. A $3,500 pipe organ is being installed in the church which will much improve the music, and, it is believed, will add to the already large congregations of the church.

In and Around Chicago

The Minister's Association met at the Y. M. C. A. on Dec. 21 and listened to a review of C. C. Morrison's "The Meaning of Baptism." There was a good attendance and an eager and courteous discussion with scarcely two brethren of the same mind. The Association will not meet further until the beginning of the new year. At the first meeting in January, O. F. Jordan will present a review of Bouck White's "The Call of the Carpenter."

Rev. J. H. O. Smith, who has been called to the pulpit of Metropolitan Church, Chicago.

Evanston church had a good attendance on December 20 and three additions. They have announced Dec. 27 as Church Letter Sunday on which day it is hoped to induce a number of people who have delayed presenting their letters, to do so.

A committee from the Chicago Christian Missionary Society visited Harvey church one evening recently. It was observed as home-coming day and there was a good attendance. The visiting brethren gave the church advice with regard to plans for an enlargement of the work.

Dr. Jenkins Sees World Going Dry.

By a rising vote, the congregation of Linwood Boulevard Church of Kansas City, on December 13, indorsed the sermon, "Next Tuesday's Vote on Prohibition in the National Congress," preached by Dr. Burris A. Jenkins and instructed that a letter be sent Representative William P. Borland asking him to support it. In announcing for his topic this prohibition subject Doctor Jenkins explained that he thought it most timely. "If for no other reason than the late developments in the European war," he said. "I think the subject has traveled through the local option, statewide, to national and now worldwide importance. The German kaiser, himself a total abstainer, has drilled it into his officers and men that temperance in a crisis is necessary. Russia, by a single flourish of the czar's pen, abolished liquor and awoke two months later to a sensation of physical and economic strength never enjoyed before. England has systematically reduced the consumption of intoxicants by her men and in our own United States our navy is dry. So much for intoxicants and war."

Meetings Bring Results.

The evangelistic services held in First Church, Bloomington, Ill., have brought definite results in the way of new members as well as the not less real results of an awakened religious interest in the community. During the ten days of these meetings, there have been ninety-one new members added to the roll, eighty-three of these coming on profession of faith. The pastor preached to the new converts on December 13, on the subject, "The New Life in Christ."

A New Building at Monticello, Ind.

The congregation at Monticello, Ind., have completed a beautiful new building in their city with a seating capacity of 500. There are plenty of rooms for the Sunday-school classes and for other purposes. The cost of the building was $20,000 which was all paid before dedication.

Give Newsboys Christmas Dinner.

The Sunday-school class of Central church, Lexington, Ky., taught by the pastor's wife, Mrs. I. J. Spencer, has arranged to feed the newsboys of their city on Christmas. Tables will be set for the little fellows and they will be given their full share of the holiday cheer.

New Building in Denver.

Highland church, Denver, Colo., has a new building and they secured Geo. L. Snively to dedicate it for them, on December 13. The auditorium will seat 650 people. The building is modern and a source of great pride to the members of the local church.

Harvard Classmates Meet Again.

K. F. Nance introduced Fay Livengood in his pulpit at Hutchinson, Kans., with more than usual feeling because they were classmates at Harvard. Mr. Livengood has been in Harpoot College in Turkey and is home for graduate work in philosophy. When he goes out again, it will be under a mission board of the Disciples. He was a graduate of Transylvania University and was ordained to the ministry by O. L. Cook.

New "Bethany Church" Dedicates.

A rural church six miles out from Pleasant Hill, Mo., has built a new building on a corner of the farm of E. J. Stulz. The church follows good Disciple terminology and calls itself the Bethany church. A. N. Lindsay of Clinton, Mo., spoke for the church three times on dedication day. In this section, the rural church is not dying out.

Aged Minister Passes Away.

Wilson Griffin, for many years minister of the church at Mason City, Ill., died at his home at Mason City, December 12. Besides being pastor at Mason City, he had a circuit of small churches in the country which he was accustomed to visit. The cause of his death was given as general debility. He is survived by a wife and seven children.

Urges National Prohibition.

Irvington church of Indianapolis at its morning service on December 13, passed resolutions demanding national prohibition. The text of the resolution is as follows: "To the Indiana Members in Congress. The congregation of the Irvington Christian Church, representing a total membership of more than seven hundred adults, is in favor of the bill now before congress looking to national prohibition. A rising vote of the congregation present yesterday was unanimous in favor of the bill, and we as a committee were designated to so report to you so that you might know the sentiment of at least this part of your constituency. As this is the bill that you are to vote on, the sentiment crystalized about this particular legislation. Doubtless some might have preferred some other form of action, if it led to prohibition, but as the issue is clearly drawn in the measure now pending, and as the congregation is opposed to the liquor traffic, it takes this opportunity to express its sentiments with the hope that you will find it consistent to consider their views."

Pastor Has Two Calls in One Week.

J. N. Jessup of Johnson City, Tenn., had two calls in one week. These were from First Church of Portland, Ore., and from Hopkinsville, Ky. He decided to accept the one closer to his former field of labor and will go there at an early date. He succeeds H. D. Smith at Hopkinsville. Mr. Smith had a pastorate of eighteen years in that field.

Polish Worker at Danville.

Michael Majetka was called from Newark, N. J., last spring to carry on a work for foreign population in Westville, a suburb of Danville, Ill. He was supported by the churches of Vermillion County, First Church of Danville, leading off with a contribution of $500. The meetings have been held in the Congregational building up to the present time but this arrangement cannot go on farther. There have been four baptisms and two hundred families are being reached for Bible study through the visitation of Mr. Majetka. Members of First Church of Danville have been conducting sewing classes for girls. Other institutional work will be done when quarters are secured for such activities.

Dr. Geo. H. Combs Commends Doctrine.

First Church, Bloomington, Ill., has been having good audiences to hear Dr. Geo. H. Combs, pastor of Independence Blvd. church of Kansas City, each evening recently. On one evening, Dr. Combs preached upon the subject of doctrine and deplored the hostility to doctrinal statements of religion that is to be found in some quarters. He said: "We pride ourselves on our practicality: We say: Give us practical things without first having theories. Doctrines are truths about God, man and human responsibilities; should we not know the truth about these things? There is a sublime intolerance about doctrine: the truth will fight the untruth until one will go to the wall. There is no objection to the doctrines of science, the doctrines of economics, the doctrines of pedagogy, etc., then why object to the doctrines of religion, From the strife of varying doctrines we shall one day reach the true one."

Disciple Boys Defeat Baptists.

The Sunday-schools in Parsons, Kans., are organized to play basket ball and there are some hot contests. On the evening of December 8, there was a match game between the Disciples and the Baptists which resulted in a decided victory for the former.

Young People Give Drama.

The young people of Leavenworth, Kans., church gave a comedy in a hall recently called "Down in Dixie." An orchestra of eight pieces assisted with the production of the play. Hans Freienmuth as Colonel Harvey Wells was a dashing Union officer and won well merited applause for his heroic conduct. When he won the pretty southern heiress, Helen Trevoir, as played by Miss Jessie Lambert, he gained the everlasting displeasure of Dale Dessery, a handsome "villain," playing the part of Major Bradley, a Confederate officer, but delighted the audience.

Christian Culture Courses in Denver.

The old prayer-meeting is taking on new life through a transformation of its character and function at Central Church in Denver. From November 4 to April 14, there will be Bible Lecture Studies and Christian Culture Courses. A series of studies will be given by the pastor, G. B. Van Arsdall on the general theme "The Practice of God." These are: "Self-Consciousness—Adam;" "Self-Direction—Abel;" "Self-Development—Enoch;" "Self-Sacrifice—Abraham;" "Keeping the God-Consciousness—Joseph;" "Making Practical God's Direction and Development of our Lives—Moses;" "The Triumph of Faith in Self-Sacrifice—Job."

C. W. B. M. President Active.

Mrs. C. C. Titus, president of the C. W. B. M. of northern California, is taking her duties seriously and is making addresses this year in many places in behalf of the work of her society. On December 20, she spoke at First Church, Los Angeles, where Russell F. Thrapp is pastor. This church is eighth in the list of large contributors of the Foreign Society. The churches that do more are at Akron, Ohio, Cleveland, Ohio, Beatrice, Neb., Hyde Park in Chicago, Pomona, Cal., Pittsburgh (east end) and First Church, Louisville. The Los Angeles church is planning a large increase in its missionary activities, so some of its near rivals must look to their laurels.

Church Plans for Devotions.

O. C. Bolman, pastor of the church at Pekin, Ill., has planned a continuous campaign for his church to commence Christmas and to continue until Easter. The object of the campaign is to deepen the spiritual life of the church by securing definite and continuous Bible reading. Each member is asked to promise to read at least seven chapters in the Bible every week. The course of 365 best chapters outlined for 1915 by Wilbert W. White will be followed. Cottage prayer-meetings will be held during the entire period. The town is divided into ten districts. Each district has a reporter and one or two heralds to carry messages. Ten stenographers will assist the pastor in preparing the work in outline form and placing it in the hands of the membership. Personal work will be done continuously. January 3 will be letter day. They are making an effort to secure about twenty-five members by affiliation with the local church. Three weeks before Easter they are to have W. F. Shearer of Angola, Ind., for a meeting.

State Secretary Helps New Church.

Less Than a Cent

You may know a woman who has a reputation for making delicious cake, biscuits, etc.,—who seems to hit it right every time.

You may also know a woman, who, no matter how painstaking, can't seem to get the knack of successful baking.

Both use the same butter, same eggs, same flour and sugar. What is the difference?

Very likely it's all in the baking powder. Undoubtedly the woman with the knack uses Royal Baking Powder, and the unsuccessful woman uses an alum baking powder thinking it cheaper.

Yet the difference in the cost of a whole large cake is less than a cent.

It is economy to use

"Is being tempted sin?" "What is conscience?" "Does God send disease?" "Do true Christians need doctors for healing?" "Is sinlessness possible?" "You urge all to sing—did Jesus sing?" "What do you think of city employees proposing to give a per cent of their salary for charity?" "How can I become a Christian?" "Could Jesus sin?" "Why do pastors object to their members playing cards and dancing?" "Should young people marry?" "How may we know we love well enough to marry?" "Is it right to be a 'turncoat' in religion?"

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus January 1. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in thousands of the Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

The Combs Meeting at Bloomington, Illinois

By Edgar DeWitt Jones.

George Hamilton Combs, of Independence Blvd. Christian Church, Kansas City, recently led old First Church, Bloomington, in twelve days of evangelistic meetings. The visit of this gifted man to our city, though all too brief, brought us many blessings, and did our church and community a vast amount of good. In round numbers there were ninety-five additions to the church, all by confession of faith except eight who came by letter. There were some extraordinary features of this meeting of which I shall take note here.

First: The attendance for the week nights despite inclement weather, the approach of the holiday season and all sorts of meetings, banquets, etc., was unprecedentedly large. There was not a single service that we did not have to use our gallery, sometimes the lecture room, and on Sunday evening we were taxed to our full capacity and people were turned away.

Second: The Decision Day service on Sunday morning before our church school, massed for the occasion, will never be forgotten by those present. Sixty-seven came forward in response to the invitation, and while some of them were of a tender age, the whole service was full of "sweetness and light." Among those who came at this service were, in some instances, all the children of certain families of our congregation. A fine sight was that of fourteen young men who made confession, clean-cut, virile young fellows they are.

Third: The unique and versatile style of the preacher coupled with much earnestness and a very direct evangelistic appeal made these meetings of fascinating interest. There is a charm, a finish, and a force in the preaching of George H. Combs, which puts him in a class quite by himself. Twenty years ago I was a lad in the Sixth and Prospect Church, Kansas City, and heard George H. Combs every Sunday. He was a strong preacher then, and he is a stronger preacher today. I doubt if any of the pastors of our larger churches quite equal this man in the directness and fervor of his evangelistic message. Sometime I hope to put on paper my impressions of George Hamilton Combs as preacher-evangelist.

Fourth: Dr. Combs contributed not only to this single congregation, but to the entire city. He spoke one morning at the general assembly of the Normal University and made a "ten strike" with the student body. And he addressed our Ministerial Association on "Preachers and Preaching," a message full of great inspirational values, one worthy a place in any volume of the Yale Lectures on Preaching.

Fifth: George Hamilton Combs is the fourth of our outstanding men and ministers who have come to lead us here in special meetings in the last five years. The first was John E. Pounds of Hiram College Church; the second was W. F. Richardson of First Church, Kansas City; and the third was Peter Ainslie of Christian Temple, Baltimore. Because of these noble men and their spiritual messages our church and our community are bigger and better, and the Kingdom of the Christ in Bloomington has been measurbly advanced thereby.

Sixth: The systematic and faithful work of our church school—some sixty-six teachers and officers—is to be seen in the results of these meetings. We have an educational institution doing reverent work and our entire membership is being enriched through this mighty force for good.

Churches Commend Joint Apportionment.

Many hundreds of churches have written into the office of the secretary of the General Convention, Graham Frank, with regard to the Joint Apportionment which has been issued. Of all these letters only two have been unkindly critical. There is in all the mail a practical unanimity with regard to the wisdom of the plan that is being inaugurated to have a central committee issue the total list of missionary and benevolent apportionments to the church in one system.

Church Publishes a Neighborhood Paper.

Seventh Church of Indianapolis began on December first the publication of a neighborhood weekly. While considerable space is used by the local church, the neighborhood organizations are encouraged to use the paper. Three thousand copies are printed and distributed in all the neighborhood every week. The boys of the church are organized to take care of the distribution. The paper is supported by liberal advertising patronage.

A Growing City Church.

Wilkinsburg church of Pittsburgh, Pa., is now entering on the fourth year of the ministry of W. S. Cook. During the past three years there have been 180 added to the church, mostly in the regular services. The pastor has depended upon pastoral evangelism for the most part. This year he will exchange evangelistic meetings with J. P. Allison of Waynesburg, Pa.

Generous Gifts Cheer College Christmas

A November visit of Dr. W. S. Woods to the college that bears his name had much to do with making this Christmas a joyful one at for he promised the institution an additional gift that will add to its beauty, its commodiousness and its usefulness.

Chief among the improvements projected by the benefactor is the erection of a handsome cottage on the campus to be known as the President's Home.

Four other large buildings are in contemplation at the college, along with an appropriate landscape scheme.

A standardized Junior College, with Departments in Music, Art, Expression, and Home Economics.

would carry it to him. He had no woman to care for him, for his daughter "followed the races" with her husband, and his room and bed looked so unclean and smelt so vilely, that I became quite miserable about him. When I spoke to the Head of the House about it, he was unsympathetic, and said:

"Darkies like Uncle Peter don't mind smells and dirt; they are so used to them they would feel uncomfortable without them."

But I thought I knew better. So I persuaded a friendly physician to give me an order to move Uncle Peter to the Negro ward in the hospital, and took him there in my phaeton—for it was before we had a city ambulance in our town. I felt quite happy and triumphant, when I left him in the clean and pleasant ward, and thought how happy and well cared for he would be.

When I went to see him a week or so after, he was utterly miserable, and besought me in moving terms to take him back home.

"Dey done washt me enuff to kill me, an' me a rumatic, too," he said indignantly. "You know tain't good fur me, when I never wuz washt all over at once befo' in my life. An' evything so clean an' keerful, they ain't no place so much as to spit. An' no nabers to drop in an' pass the time o' day, an' tell the news; please, old Miss, take me back home, where I kin do as I please, an' lemme die dar in peace."

So he was moved back to the little close room, and no homesick wanderer ever returned to his home and loved ones with more ineffable joy than did Uncle Peter. His days were probably shortened by his unsanitary surroundings, but at least his mind was at peace. He always felt apologetic to me for leaving the hospital, and one of the last things he said to me was:

"Horsepittles is fur white folks, ole Miss; cullud folks can't stand such hard treatment." T. W. H.

The CONQUEST

"In Time of War Prepare for Peace"

This greatest of all wars fills all minds. Not only are there greater armies than ever before and more deadly weapons, but new modes of warfare in the air and under the sea. The paralyzing influence of war, also, is felt throughout the civilized world as never before. It is humanity's war.

Doubtless the United States as the greatest neutral power will have an important part in the final settlement, and it is none too early to begin the study of the underlying causes of war and of the conditions necessary to peace.

Cannot our classes do something to create an enlightened public opinion touching this whole subject? Note the studies for 1915 in Josiah Strong's magazine of social study

"The Gospel of the Kingdom"

JANUARY.—War and Its Causes.
Militarism the burden of the world. Its human cost. Its economic cost. Its moral cost. An inherited evil, its roots deep in the past. The causes of war: economic greed; materialistic conceptions of wealth and national development.

FEBRUARY.—War and Civilization.
A lapse to barbarism. War and the home. War and education. War and the arts. War and progress.

MARCH.—War and Labor.
War chiefly the work of war-lords and money-lords. Fought by the masses for their masters. Who pays the bills?

APRIL.—New World-Ideals.
Influence of ideals. Ideals of unity. A new world-life. The new sense of brotherhood. World-patriotism.

MAY.—International Interdependence.
In food supply; in commerce; in finance; in industry; in the arts and sciences; in education; in progress.

JUNE.—True Internationalism.
Disarmament. Obstacles in its Way. Crying necessity for it. International federation. The Parliament of Man. An International court. An International police.

JULY.—The March of Democracy.
Democracy vs. war-lords. The problems of democracy. Democracy and civilization. Democracy in industry. The organization of democracy. The coming of democracy.

AUGUST.—The Race Problem.
Race antagonism. Race and nationality. The place of nationality. The contribution of racial differences.

SEPTEMBER.—The Contributions of the Races.

It has been scientifically demonstrated that pictures get over three times the results obtained by the use of words. Worship and the Spiritual Life

THE ADOPTION, BY THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST, OF A CONSTRUCTIVE PURPOSE WITH RESPECT TO THE SPIRITUAL LIFE WILL REQUIRE THEM TO TAKE A CONSTRUCTIVE ATTITUDE TOWARD CHURCH WORSHIP.

The indirection and inadequacy of social worship in the churches of Disciples have often been the subject of impatient criticism and exhortation by our better teachers and leaders.

But these teachers and leaders invariably pointed us to some of the denominational churches as models for our imitation.

Over against the comparative disorder and bareness and, perhaps, crudeness, of the service of worship in many churches of Disciples was set the stateliness and good taste of certain neighboring churches.

As a result whatever response to these criticisms and exhortations was made, was, in large measure, imitative. It has not brought new life to the churches but in many cases has been, as imitation is bound to be, the precurser of spiritual barrenness and inefficiency.

It is a miscarriage of history for a Christian movement as distinctive in its motives and as unique in its position in relation to the rest of Christendom as the Disciples movement is, to borrow its norms of worship from the denominational order.

The Disciples should independently, though in no unsympathetic or exclusive spirit, construct their own worship, a worship that should embody and foster their principles and their own living faith.

And if they take seriously their present lofty task of building up an inner life homogeneous with their principles and insights, they will be compelled to construct a form of worship rich with all that is good in conventional forms and made more catholic and spiritual by their own conscious fellowship with God.

The reform of worship—it is one of the most obviously needed reforms in Disciples churches today. But it is a reform hardly less obviously needed by the denominational churches than by the Disciples of Christ—needed, not from the standpoint of dignity and aesthetic beauty and good taste, perhaps, but certainly from the standpoint of the inner spiritual life.

The way to reform and uplift worship among Disciples, therefore, is not to point them to conventional models for imitation, but to recall them to their own spiritual principles and get them to ask radical questions as to what type of worship will best interpret and establish those principles in the souls of the worshipers.

A discriminating and constructive attitude toward our traditional and stereotyped church worship would result in a more thoroughgoing reconstruction than any of us imagines. Our worship is burdened with much that is irrelevant and diverting.

It is doubtful if the institution called a "choir"—whether chorus or quartet—is a spiritual factor in worship. But there certainly is no doubt that much if not most of the repertory of "anthems" sung to us by our choirs is grotesque and positively injurious to the spirit of true worship.

The whole matter of church music needs thorough overhauling and reconstruction. On the one hand, it has been corrupted by the sentimental and unmusical songs of modern crowd-evangelism; on the other hand, it has been devitalized by unreligious aestheticism.

Praise has lost its spontaneity. The people do not know the joy of soulful song—they either hire others to sing to them or else they hire a "conductor" whose business it is to make them sing whether they want to or not.

Such a condition is not to be remedied by tinkering at it. It will be effectually and wholesomely remedied when the worshipers bring to the service a conscious, positive, spiritual life, a true and peaceful sense of God's gracious working in their souls and a passion for closer fellowship with him.

Probably, too, a constructive purpose in the inner life will materially revise the entire general scheme of our public worship. The Protestant denominations have gone to seed with the conception of "one man" leadership in worship. From invocation to benediction only a single voice is heard—the preacher's. The people are an "audience," not a worshiping congregation.

Through a lengthy prayer, and, too often, an irrelevant Scripture-reading, through diverting announcements referring sometimes to strikingly grotesque functions connected with the kitchen department of the church or the theatrical department, through an impassioned exhortation intended to "boost" attendance at the church services or the Sunday-school, and through the sermon, the people sit passive, contributing a negligible modicum of mental effort to the whole.

The worship is uncoöperative. The soul of the worshiper is "led": it has no chance to strike out upon its own initiative.

Reacting from the bareness and autocracy of such a plan of worship it is usually assumed that we need more form, more ritual, more "dignity." Hence we have pastors who adopt some of the venerable prayers of the Anglican church and provide a complex order of worship which keeps congregation and choir on the tip-toe of attention lest they miss their respective cues.

An inner, creative spiritual life, quickened and guided by the Disciples' own historical ideals, would shove off much venerable ritual and all the crude, modern high-pressure devices as the sap shoves off the tree's dead leaves in the Spring. A truly constructive spirituality would treat the problem of church worship constructively, fashioning a public order consistent with its insights and adapted to its purposes.

Such a task awaits the Disciples of Christ.

Interestingly, their history is not without suggestion as to the type such an order of worship should take on.

It will strike some readers as strange to rescue the little congregations of the so-called "anti" wing of the Disciples from the obscurity and disregard into which we of the main body have finally consigned them, and to set them forward as in any respect models for the rest of us.

Yet in the matter of spiritual worship, it is hardly likely that anyone acquainted with their simple and democratic ways will dispute their superiority. One never worships with them in England, in Australia, or in the southern states of our own country without wishing for a similar social participation of the whole congregation and the active leadership of laymen in the public worship of our own churches.

Hard, legalistic, intolerant, contentious about mint and cummin, they have preserved nevertheless, the type of public worship which belongs naturally to the Disciples of Christ.

Here is a historic survival full of suggestion. Avoiding the formalism of the ritualistic denominations and the "one man" autocracy of the Puritan churches, they have kept their worship sanely free from the false sentimentalism and institutionalism that have so coarsened and weakened modern piety.

Spiritual worship calls for simplicity, democracy, an orderly informality, a dignity that is not sought after nor conscious of itself but that rests upon the worth and reality of the things done.

The rebirth of their inner life will bring to the Disciples of Christ a redefinition of their standards of worship and a reconstruction of their public procedure in forms congenial to their ideals.

"Don't" versus "Do"

The Inspiration of a Positive Christian Program.

The wonderful work of Dr. Grenfell on the coast of Labrador in relieving distress, and in teaching religion by the example of his own personal attitude toward others, makes him a classic illustration of modern missions. It also gives him the right to speak with a certain authority on the essentials of the Christian life. The following article appeared first in The Congregationalist and is here given to our readers with an acknowledgement of our obligation both to the author and our sincerely valued contemporary.

BY WILFRED T. GRENFELL, M. D.

FOR many years I had been interested in what, for lack of other description, I am bound to call the "religious life" of the people in a certain fishing village. Young men had grown to beyond middle age since I first knew them, and were still steadily adhering to three Sunday services and three week-day meetings. Some of the leading men had been discussing the morality of one or two richer men in the harbor who had taken out grants for the land, were cutting it up into lots and making newcomers pay for it. They had decided that it was not Christian. A little later I was talking to one of them, a really first-class old fellow.

"Uncle Joe, didn't you take a government grant?"

"Yes, Doctor."

"Haven't you sold four lots already?"

"Why, yes, Doctor. It gives me a few cents in my old age."

"I thought you said it was wrong to take up the land and sell it to newcomers."

"So it is, Doctor. So it is. But you see, we be only poor men." Religion here was theory, not practice; none of the others had any land to sell.

PARODIES ON CHRIST'S WAY.

At another time, the best men in the place had agreed that in order to try and save the beauty of the harbor, and to attract visitors there who spend money for the benefit of those incapacitated for earning their living by fishing, a law should be passed forbidding the cutting of the trees within a certain radius of the harbor. During a trial of one of the men for breaking the law, one or two men asked leave to speak. One of them was the leader of the "revival" services which were being held in the harbor. He wanted to state his opinion that "the fishermen were not out for beauty, but for comfort." "They didn't see why the men should not cut down the few trees left, and grub up the roots as well, as has been done in other places."

The Bench, which had not "got religion" by their standard, tried to point out that it could only be for a short while that they would derive the slightest benefit, and that it would injure the place permanently. Moreover, a beautiful home and harbor always helps one to live a beautiful life. Cutting the trees spoiled the gardens, as the snow all drifted away and left the bare ground. It kept all those who were unable, like him, to go fishing, without a chance of employment. No man could live to himself anyhow. But the man went away declaring that he did not see what he was going to get out of it, and he thought a man should do as he liked for his comfort. Business being over, he could now go back to religion for the evening. Even these trifling instances suggest how such parodies of Christ's way have made it seem contemptible in the minds of thinking men.

The healthy human mind rejects, the vigorous youthful mind rejects, and the younger and more healthful they are the more they do not care to hide the fact that they have, the doctrine that the ideal way is "not to do." The policy of Fabius Cunctator is only possibly commendable when it corresponds with the Scotch idea of biding one's time, or getting fully ready to deliver a crushing blow. The surgeon who refuses to operate in an early stage of the disease, fearing for his own reputation, really neglects to operate. The wayfarer who does not help his neighbor in trouble for fear of spoiling his clothes, or even of his life, is neglecting his duty and his philosophy is contemptible. The best spirit in every man acclaims him only as ideal who does things at whatever sacrifice.

INDEXING SINS.

One winter the leading exponents of a sect for which I have the highest respect and among whom I number some of my best friends with the highest ideals, adopted and imported for their instruction in the way of life a book issued by their church for the guidance of its members. Not to drink, smoke, dance, play cards, go to the theater, work on Sundays, swear and other indulgences and occupations, were scheduled and "indexed," as were many sins of immorality which go without saying and would have been just as well omitted. Taboos were laid on certain forms of art which appeal to many, on entertainments which many advocate as being especially regenerative and on forms of clothing which in some countries are positively national.

It so happened that a most ardent young medical man and proud adherent of a noted Scotch clan was spending the winter with me at his own expense, for no other reason than to try and realize his own ideal of the way of life, and had brought with him the special garments it was his proud distinction to be allowed to wear. As he had arrived in the late fall, he had not yet found the climate here specially adapted to bare knees, but all the same he was looking forward to displaying these garments to honor some special occasion. I can still remember his face when I pointed out that they were included in this Index Expurgatorius.

A PROFITLESS CONTROVERSY.

It might be supposed that to make every seventh day one of rest, and to call that day the one, now almost universally agreed upon, and to insist upon its observance, now that it has been scientifically and philosophically demonstrated as advisable, is at least more or less ideal and not calculated to "stir up evil." But the problem as to which is the day we must not do things has been one of our worst troubles.

There came into our harbor a teacher who insisted that the day before was a better day, the real and only ideal day, and its observance instead of our chosen day, essential to the "way of life." A very few left their old church and followed him. They ostentatiously went out fishing, while their former comrades of the "way" still studied and followed the precepts of the expurgatory book. I can still see being thrown from the church on Monday the firewood which had been carefully cut on Sunday and brought freely for the humble ministry of fuel. My Scotch friend had left the Coast, but here at least he stands avenged. Many believe that even dogs are affected by ridicule, and certainly nothing can be more harmful to any human cause than that it should be obviously ridiculous.

THE BEAUTY OF THE OPEN MIND.

The recognition of this is of primal and utmost importance in these days for the welfare of the Kingdom of God. Gentleness now is needed, not so much of action, for that is forced upon us, but gentleness —gentle manliness—of thought. Self-assertiveness is one of the most repellent attributes of any man. No great man can be so, or he is not great. Fancy Lord Lister sneering at and denouncing even those whose "old ways" his immortal discovery was to revolutionize. On the contrary, they denounced the way of the man who conferred one of the greatest blessings mankind has ever received. Harvey gave mankind the inestimable boon of the knowledge of the circulation of the blood, but the old school of his day only accepted it, practically at the point of the bayonet. Jenner and Pasteur saved millions of lives through their patient and masterful work. The old school abused them and still, in spite of facts, the shallow denounce them. It has been the same with every advance which can be named which has helped to revolutionize human knowledge and advantage human life. It seems it must be so. But at least let us not do this ignorantly, defeating our own ends and debarring men from following the Christ avowedly, because of our intellectual conceit or overslept conservatism. Science suggests to us now that there is no such thing as matter, all is a form of motion; and we merely the expression of perpetual vortices of whirling motion, while thought is simply a disturbance of equilibrium. Can we not be content with merely judging ourselves and criticising our own methods?

WHAT EXPERIENCE BRINGS.

Experience would teach me that as men grow older the strong bias of youthful days, like the rills in thawing snow, tends to become obliterated and the refreshing streams do run at last into larger and more beneficent channels. This, to us medical men, is not a symptom of defective processes in the machine which makes thought possible. Meanwhile, we have broadened the meaning of the word "monomania" to include and qualify as needing control the whole genus of those whose misfortune it is to arrogate to themselves intellectually that which they most certainly do not possess.

Experience was suggested by the great Master as the one school in which all can learn whether his teachings as to "the way" were of God or man. This school for doing things may cost us dear, but it has the merits of no undeserved invectives, and even if we do make failures in our attempts, even if we do unintentionally select wrong methods, such wanderings as those of Kim and his lama ended in the haven where they would be, because they kept on—and Tyl Tyl and Mytil found the Bluebird by much doing. Shall we not concede at least this may be equally as true of any man's groping, even if his methods are not ours?

I am now speaking to those who are in earnest about life. Eternity is not long enough to convince the blasé indifferentist who cares nothing for life, or believes that neither the way nor the goal exists at all. It seems futile to spend time arguing about ideals with those in whom physical or intellectual wealth has only aroused a contempt for life and a chronic condition of boredom. Nor does it seem more profitable to expect words to alter the way of life of those in whom either wealth or illiteracy has permitted an unreasoning bias against life to develop. The foolishness of mere word preaching can only save the few anyhow.

MYSTERY IN LIFE.

Dean Hodges is not the only authority who has put on record that he is a fortunate man who, because of its mystery, sees the dignity of life and he quotes Mazzini as saying that a man has learned nothing unless he has learned to wonder. Bishop Brooks says the outlook into mystery has ever a stronger intellectual influence than the inspection of discovered facts.

Certainly if entrance to heaven depends on an intellectual attitude, quite the majority will be left out, while our colored friends in the South will probably be far more generously represented.

AN UNATTRACTIVE HEAVEN.

A mixture of Revelations and a minstrel show has always left me as a boy with the idea of heaven as a place especially adapted for pleasing them: as a loud noise does the adherents of certain sects. I have positively heard men hide what should be their despair at this fact by quoting the Master as saying that we cannot expect the wise or rich in God's gifts to be largely represented. Such a view of heaven obviously does not make it very attractive to young manhood.

The Minister's Wife Gets the Best!

Giving Some Reasons Why She Should Not Be Pitied.

Why in this day of civilization do people look with pity upon the minister's wife? A young woman who was betrothed to a theological student told a minister's wife that she was the first person to sincerely congratulate her upon her engagement. The usual remark was: "So you are going to marry a minister!" You poor thing, I pity you!" Why "poor thing?" Financially the clergy do not stand high, but, like college professors, the best things come to them because of their position. Books, friends, education, travel, are theirs in greater or less abundance according as their place is large or small. Houses, furniture and clothes may be shabby, but the real things which count are theirs. Plain living and high thinking may be rare in this generation of commercialism, but in these two classes it has not yet fallen in desuetude. So common has been this saying that

Perhaps the keenest struggle in the mind of the mistress of the manse is the proper line of division between the duties incumbent upon her as housekeeper and mother, and the opportunities which are continually presenting themselves for outside work in lines which seem not only well worth doing but of urgent importance. Every mistake made in the training and development of her children she ascribes to the clashing of these duties and her mistaken judgment when the choice has been made for the outside work, but what have been the results upon the children themselves?

There is an old jingle in the mouth of everybody, and to which most people attribute some basis of fact:

"Ministers' sons and deacons' daughters Always do as they hadn't oughter."

finally investigation of the real facts has been made by more than one writer, and the results are astonishing.

Although the proverbial minister's son is still pointed out as the worst boy in town, time and again in recent years have appeared in the papers, religious and secular, lists of great men who were ministers' sons. Of course, these great men may have been unduly given to mischief as boys. It may be true that greatness and extreme liveliness are akin, as genius and insanity are said to be!

However that may be, it may be truthfully asserted that the life of the minister's family is not, after all, more difficult than that of other professions. And it may just as truthfully be said that the minister's wife and children enjoy many things—things most worth while—that are denied to more independent callings.

The House-wife's Hymn

A Song of Gratitude.

O God, I thank Thee!
With every glowing part of me,
From the whole heart of me,
I thank Thee, God!
How shall I say it? What the words to tell
The warm, sweet glory and the bosom swell?
Forgive the language of my simple tongue;
I cannot say what wiser ones have sung.
Listen, and I will tell it, God, in my own way;
For I must speak it on this wonder day.

Somehow, Father—be it not shame to me!—
'Tis in such humble ways I compass Thee.
I seem to see Thee in the simplest things:
Foamy water that bubbles and sings,
Bursting in rainbows over the washtub's rim;
The clean, sweet clothes filling my basket to the brim—
How white they flutter at the wind's brisk will
That whips them whiter still!
And when, over the ironing-board billowing clover-sweet,
They smoothe to satin beneath the friendly heat,
I feel such thrills of happiness. . . . Forgive me, Lord,
If praise like mine should not accord!

God, I am one who cannot understand
The fearful works of Thy mysterious hand,
The great immensity that swings above;
The thing I understand is human love.
Yea, human love and human things: the touch
Of well-worn objects that I love so much—
Cushion and chair, dishes and pan and broom,
The comradeship of a familiar room;
My plants there in the window, and the glow
Of shining tin things hanging in a row.
Scorn, if Thou wilt, my common way—
I must speak truth and only truth this day.

O God, I seem to find Thee everywhere!
The steam that rises from the kettle there
Seems more a miracle, somehow, to me
Than all the Heavenly marvels that I see.
The hum of dear things cooking on the range
Fills me with rapture: Father, is it strange,
Since these Thy products are of grain and food
And Thou Thyself hast called them very good?
And is it wrong, O God—my surging pride
When the rejoicing oven door swings wide
On russet bakings I have made to feed
My hungry brood? Thou knowest, Lord, their need.

Thou knowest how they lean to me for life:
Even the strong, brave man who calls me wife—
The father of my flock—must look to me
For blood and sinew and the strength to be.
This, then, the greatest, dearest thing of all—
To know that I may answer to their call;
That Thou hast made me mother, friend, and mate,
Keeper of life and molder of their fate,
By this I know the universe as Thine—
That hearts and homes and people are divine!
Is there a greater gift in all Thy store?
My woman's heart is full—I ask no more.

O God, I thank Thee!
With every glowing part of me,
From the whole heart of me,
I thank Thee, God!

All the Church at the Church's Task

How an Ohio Congregation Carried Through the Every-member Canvass.

BY J. A. CANBY, PASTOR, UHRICHSVILLE, O.

THE canvass that I shall speak of was made in a church of 900 members. This church had used the duplex envelope system of three years with the old-time annual canvass by the deacons of the several districts, with the result that only one-third of the members had given anything to current expenses and less than one-fourth had contributed to missions. A comparison with other churches that have not had the every member canvass will show that this is a fair average. Now what are some of the definite results which came to this church through the every member canvass?

I.

The first result was a marked increase in the number of contributors to all causes. Not every member was reached. Some were non-residents. Others were not at home and were not canvassed afterwards. Twenty-five refused to give anything. However, the tabulated results show that three-fourths of the membership are now contributing to current expenses and missions. Nearly all the remainder could have been enlisted by a follow-up system.

II.

The second result was a remarkable increase in the amount given to current expenses and missions. Our offerings to current expenses have been increased 25 per cent and our offerings to missions 400 per cent. The reason for the much larger gains for missions is accounted for by the fact that this result was definitely planned. In the educational campaign preparatory to the canvass, the ideal set before our people was, "As Much for Others as for Ourselves." The people were asked to divide their offerings equally with the local church and the wide, wide world. Many however, did not do this, and even some of the canvassers were unwilling to ask this of the people.

III.

The third result was a living link in the foreign field, and another living link in the home field. This result was a blessing from God that no one expected to follow upon our first trial of the every member canvass. You cannot know the joy it brought to our people to know that they were able at last to support two missionaries of the cross of Christ. Our church is now supporting Alfred R. Bowman of Wuhu, China, and Miss Bessie Pehotsky in the work among the Bohemians in Cleveland, Ohio. The living link in the foreign field is sustained through the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and the living link in the home field, through the Ohio Christian Missionary Society, This has brought new life to our church. For the first time in thirty-seven years our people feel the thrill of the Master's program to go into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation.

IV.

The fourth result of the canvass was the discovery of a new continent which should be embraced in the every member canvass. The every member canvass marks a definite advance in church finances. It seeks an offering from every member. It places the responsibility of securing such an offering not upon the pastor and members of the official board, but upon a special chosen committee of men who are set apart by prayer before the congregation to go out and look after this business.

But the every member canvass does not specify what the minimum individual offering should be. It leaves the amount of the offering largely to the mercy of an undisciplined conscience, with the result that the returns from the canvass show that some people have given a hundred times as much as others in proportion to their ability. Since the beginning of our history, we have had an every member Lord. But we have not left to the conscience of the people who that Lord shall be. We have preached Christ.

FAITH WITHOUT WORKS.

We have always had an every member faith. We have not permitted men to bring articles from the various creeds and incorporate them in the gospel of the Son of God. We have preached the faith of the New Testament. We have always had an every member baptism. That baptism is immersion. No man has been allowed to select a mode according to the dictates of his conscience. We have always proclaimed the fact that Jesus Christ settled the matter of the mode of baptism.

But when it comes to the matter of how much a Christian should give to the Lord, we have solaced ourselves with the thought that we were giving as the Lord has prospered us, even while one man is giving a hundred or a thousand times as much as another in the same congregation. We have left this matter wholly to the dictates of the conscience even in the face of the fact that the scriptures clearly teach that at least a tenth of our income belongs to the Lord.

HOW THE TITHE IS DIVIDED.

But not so with this church in this canvass. As a part of the preparation for this canvass, from the pulpit and the church paper, the people were taught that they should give at least a tithe of their income to the Lord. One-fourth of the canvassers who went out were tithers. They were urged to ask the people to make the tithe their minimum offering and to divide it equally between the local church and missions. The non--tithers of course were unwilling to advocate what they did not practice.

Now for the result. The canvassers enrolled 112 people who promised to give at least a tithe of their income to the Lord. A study of the tithers and non-tithers shows that they are about equal in material circumstance. Now after six months have passed, these 112 tithers afford an object lesson for the entire brotherhood.

During the months of June, July and August, the poorest months in our financial year on account of short time in the shops, the total income of the church was $897. Of this amount the 112 tithers gave $359 or 40 per cent of the total income of the church, while 788 non-tithers gave only $538. The tithers gave $3.20 per member and the non-tithers, only sixty-eight cents per member.

Had the 900 members of the church tithed during the three months the income of the church would have been $2,880. And had the 900 members of the church tithed during the entire year, on the basis of these three poorest months, the income of the church would have amounted to $15,500. The tithe of our congregation is conservatively estimated to be between $20,000 and $25,000 annually.

TEACHING NEEDED.

The present tithers are not giving the whole tithe through the duplex envelopes. Much of it is being used for other church and benevolent expenses. This much, however, we have learned, that what is needed is an every member canvass for at least the tithe of our income for the Lord. With this ideal in mind, we have decided to hammer away on the marble of human hearts with the hammer of the every-member canvass wielded by men who believe that at least the tithe is the Lord's. We expect the chisel of divine truth to cut its way and trace out a definite standard in giving the same as in other matters of our religion.

The greatness of the Bolenge Church on the Congo is its tithing system of men with money. Shall we allow Jews, Mormons, Seventh Day Adventists, Nazarenes, Holiness people, and Africans to put us to shame in giving? A million dollars from one man is a princely gift. But a worthy offering from every one of a million and a half Disciples of Christ would be a kingly gift. Before our people ever put their hearts into the educational and benevolent interests of the church, they must be led to place their treasures there. So long as the colleges, missionary societies and benevolent organizations of the church must depend upon the offerings of the few, they will have to be content with the hearts and lives of the few as students, missionaries and evangelists.

A DEFINITE STANDARD.

Let us bring the churches of Christ to a definite standard in giving, the same as we have done in other things which constitute our strength as a people. The fact is, our colleges, our churches and all our missionary interests are getting just what we have taught the people to give, namely, just what they feel they can give. Our people have no standard in this matter. They have no conscience on giving. Let the gospel of the tithe is the Lord's be taught from the classroom and from the pulpit, let it find a place in our church papers, in our Bible-school literature and in all our publications, and our people will be born again within this generation, and we shall give millions to missions where we now give thousands.

THAT THEY ALL MAY BE ONE.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

THAT they all may be one!
One in heart, one in mind, one in aim,
That the whole world may come to believe
In the matchless, ineffable Name.

That they all may be one!
May no strife or vainglory divide,
Lest the world in confusion shall turn
From the light, and in darkness abide.

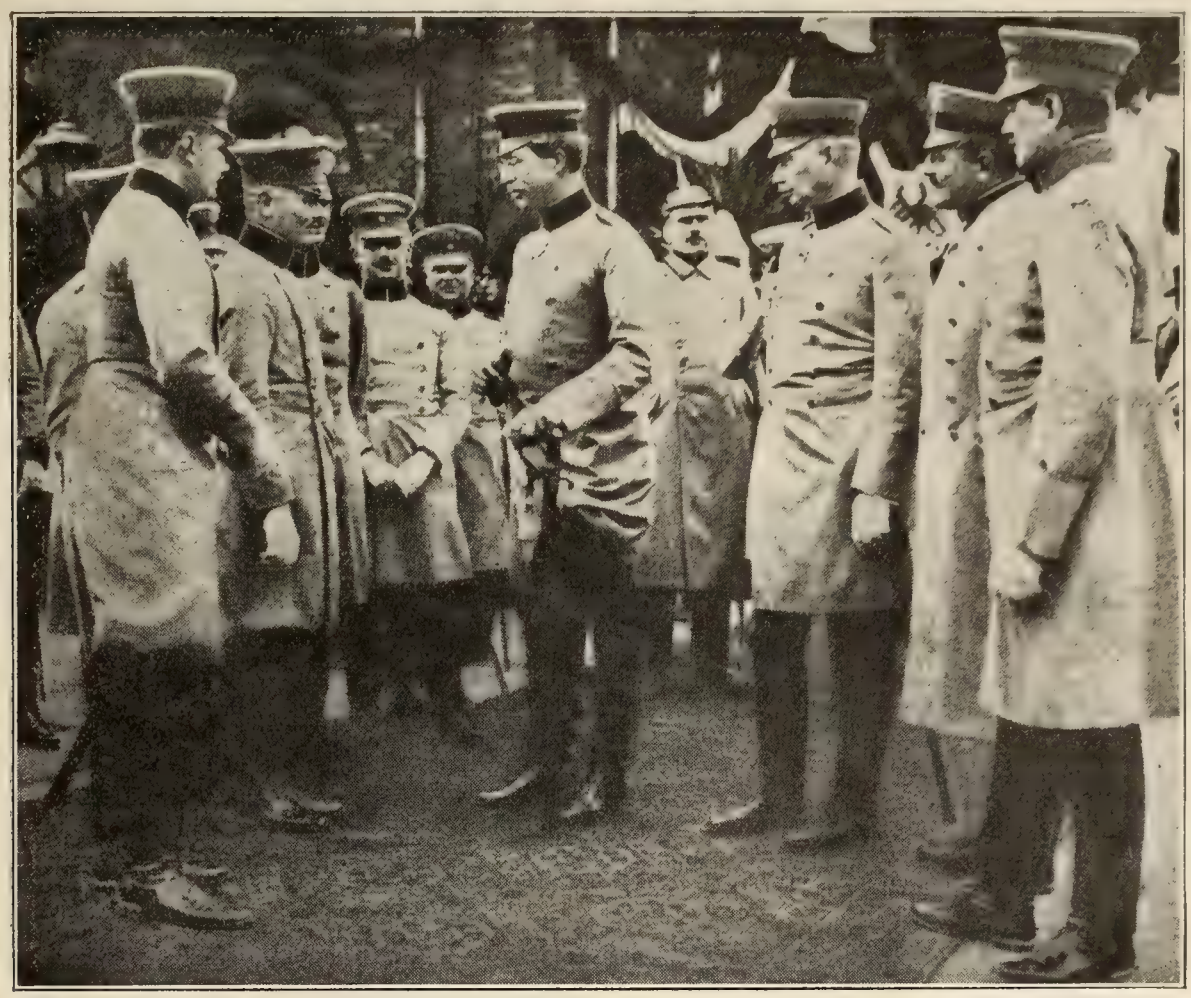
That they all may be one!
Thus He prayed ere He died for the gain
Of a sin-burdened race. Son of God,
Shall we render Thy heart's desire vain!

When Belgium's King Visited Chicago

Miss Jane Addams of Hull House Tells How the Hero of the European War Appeared as Crown Prince.

IT WAS 3 o'clock of a crisp, sunny afternoon in the spring of 1898 when the doors of the famous red brick building whose steep roofs rise like a landmark at the dingy corner of Polk and Halsted streets opened to admit Albert Leopold Clement Marc Meinrad, Prince of Flanders, and the mistress of Hull House became hostess to the future king of Belgium.

"There was introduced to me," said Miss Jane Addams, telling it to a Chicago Post reporter, "a fair-haired, fresh-faced, spectacled young man of I should have guessed 18 or 20, though his age was then 23. He was brought by the Belgian consul, the late Charles Henrotin, and Mrs. Henrotin, and before they went away we had tea together.



King Albert of Belgium, surrounded by his staff.

CHARMING AS A CROWN PRINCE.

I recall the crown prince as a most charming young man, quiet, of modest demeanor, a studious disposition reflected in his boyish face. He appeared to be genuinely interested in sociological problems and uncommonly well informed about them. The many questions he put and his own less frequent observations disclosed that.

"They staid from 3 until 6, long enough to really get some idea of Hull House work, and various departments and arrangements of the work and of the house itself aroused in the young prince a lively interest. We went to the room we call our music hall, where a good many boys and girls were playing, some on the violin.

"'Do you know, he said, 'much time has been spent to educate me in music, yet I cannot play a single instrument.'

"He talked with charming friendliness to the children, praising their skill and encouraging them to further efforts. Particularly he said he liked their playing of the violin. Then he turned to me and asked:

"'Won't you please go up there on the platform and make a speech? I have heard so much of the American ladies, but I have never heard one speak.'

A REQUEST REFUSED.

Miss Addams laughed as she said: "Goodness, you know I couldn't do that, and I said so. Mr. Henrotin playfully suggested that the request of a prince was tantamount to a command, but for all that I had to disappoint the young man, and he really seemed to be disappointed. He spoke excellent English.

"One knew, of course, that he was next in line of succession to his uncle, King Leopold" (he ascended the throne the following year upon Leopold's death), "but as I remember that boyish, quiet, gentle face with its studious, inquiring eyes behind the gold-rimmed glasses, there was no hint in it of a war king riding at the head of fighting armies. He was dressed conventionally in traveling tweeds.

"The type of neighborhood that surrounds Hull House was new to the prince. He had never seen anything like it, he said, and it impressed him vividly by its unkemptness, its squalor, for the Polk and Halsted of sixteen years ago was even less sightly than today. I suppose there must have risen in his mind's eye the clean cities of his own land, the orderly streets and neat houses, all the snug little farms of his countryside.

SHOCKED BY BAD PAVING.

"We stood a few minutes on the street corner and he looked up and down Polk street and shook his head. Polk street then had not its present pavement. There had been a pavement once, but then its sorry remains were mostly ragged blocks floating around in the mud.

"'There is not such a thoroughfare in all Belgium,' he said.

"'I think perhaps out in the country' I suggested, but he shook his head with decision. 'Not anywhere in the whole kingdom of Belgium,' he said. And it was pretty bad, that's true."

Prince Albert's call at Hull House was upon the occasion of his first and only visit to the United States, when he came, as he put it, "for pleasure and education." Miss Addams recalls that he remarked, "I am here in your country to see and learn." He arrived in New York on the steamship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, March 8, 1898, and was recalled to Belgium April 25 following.

The Psalm of Love

A Paraphrase of Paul's Great Message.

IF I CREATE wealth beyond the dream of past ages and increase not love, my heat is the flush of fever and my success will deal death.

Though I have foresight to locate the fountains of riches, and power to pre-empt them, and skill to tap them, and have no loving vision for humanity, I am blind.

Though I give of my profits to the poor and make princely endowments for those who toil for me, if I have no human fellowship of love with them my life is barren and doomed.

Love is just and kind. Love is not greedy and covetous. Love exploits no one; it takes no unearned gain; it gives more than it gets. Love does not break down the lives of others to make wealth for itself; it makes wealth to build the life of all. Love seeks solidarity; it tolerates no divisions; it prefers equal work-mates; it shares its efficiency. Love enriches all men, educates all men, gladdens all men.

The values created by love never fail; but whether there are class privileges, they shall fail; whether there are millions gathered, they shall be scattered; and whether there are vested rights, they shall be abolished. For in the past strong men lorded it in ruthlessness and strove for their own power and pride, but when the perfect social order comes, the strong shall serve the common good. Before the sun of Christ brought in the dawn, men competed and forced tribute from weakness, but when the full day shall come, they will work as mates in love, each for all and all for each. For now we see in the fog of selfishness, darkly, but then with social vision; now we see our fragmentary ends, but then we shall see the destinies of the race as God sees them. But now abideth honor, justice, and love, these three: and the greatest of these is love.

THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

EDITORIAL

A WISE EVANGELISM.

A POLICY of spiritual statesmanship is that followed by old First Church, Bloomington, Ill., whose pastor, Rev. Edgar DeWitt Jones, reminds us that during the past five years four of the most gracious spirits of the Disciples brotherhood—Pounds of Hiram, Richardson of Kansas City, Ainslie of Baltimore and now Combs of Kansas City—have conducted evangelistic meetings there.

The church is conscious of a very positive enrichment of its life. Each preacher has left a deposit of his own soul's treasure in the keeping of the congregation. The people look back with grateful recollection to the happy days of worship and evangelism and the whole community takes religion appreciably more seriously because of the strong and winsome presentation of the gospel such men set forth.

Not the least value to the church is the indirect good that comes to it through the quickening and enrichment of the pastor's own soul in the intimate companionship of his successive guests during the happy weeks of their stay. Sermons are born in that kind of fellowship, and life is renewed and developed.

Think of Edgar DeWitt Jones and George Hamilton Combs being together morning, afternoon and night for nearly a month! Think of the books they would discuss, of their heart to heart conferences, of their mutual interpretation of divine things, of the theological problems they would settle, and of the problems they would raise that neither had ever thought of before!

Geniuses for friendship, both of them.

One hardly knows which to envy the more, Combs or Jones!

THE FUNDAMENTAL HOPE.

OLIVE SCHREINER, the author of the "Story of An African Farm," and "Woman and Labor" is reported as being greatly depressed in her London home by the terrible collapse of civilization, the denial of all her dreams and philosophies.

But one morning her sympathetic friend, Mrs. Pethick-Lawrence, found her in an unwonted cheerful state of mind, and when she asked for an explanation Olive Schreiner said that she had a new ray of hope. One man had been reported by the morning paper as preferring to go to his death to taking up arms against a fellowman.

"Now," she exclaimed, "when people begin to die for peace, there is hope."

Here she touched the fundamental hope of Tolstoi, who foresaw a time when men would be too humane to butcher one another.

UNCONSCIOUS AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

DISCUSSING a successful preacher with one of his deacons some years ago the deacon said, "He lacks but one thing to make him a great preacher: he has never suffered."

The preacher was an extraordinary administrator of church affairs and had by his genius built up a great institution. His life from college days had known no defeat, no set-back, no disappointment. Steadily success had flowed around him like a rising tide. Brilliant, masterful, exhaustless in resources, he had met life with his head held high.

But there was a note he could not strike in his ministry. His deacon felt the lack of it. It was the note that only a man of grief, a soul acquainted with sorrow, could strike.

If you would know, earnest reader, what that note is, reread the sermon in last week's Christian Century by Dr. Burris A. Jenkins. He is preaching to others; he is not making a confession of his own. Yet he unconsciously makes his appeal to others in the terms of his own experience. For years this brilliant, facile teacher and preacher has been living in unrelieved jeopardy of complete physical disability. He is as well acquainted with the inside walls of the hospital as with his own study. Plans innumerable have had to be abandoned during the past ten years on account of the sharp recurrence of his affliction. His ministry at Linwood Boulevard Church, Kansas City, has been carried on, in large part, "in absentia," as he lay in hospitals in New York or Chicago recovering from successive surgical operations.

It has been a big price to pay, but there is a deftness of spiritual touch in his preaching which his people did not feel in the earlier days, a mysticism, a humanism, a note of spiritual authority which only he can voice who has intimately known pain.

Such a preacher does not talk about himself. He is no sentimentalist. He does not cheapen his personality or his message by referring repeatedly to his own specific experiences, but those who know him, plainly see that the things he selects to say, the things he deems it important to say, are the truths and insights gained in his own experience.

So his preaching is in fact his own spiritual autobiography.

A REGRET.

WE REGRET that the Christian Standard abandoned so soon and so abruptly its series of editorials on what it called "Religious Bodyism." It was a horrid name but a good theme. The editor promised with a great show of determination to sweep the gamut in a succession of pronouncements under that general title. After the announcement one article appeared—and then a long and unexplained silence.

One wonders if the editor let himself get started on a certain road without realizing where it was bound to take him, and abandoned it when he discovered whither it led.

The attempt to give an undenominational interpretation to the Disciples of Christ leads to a far more generous and inclusive fellowship and practice than the readers of the Standard are accustomed to have set before them in the pages of that newspaper.

RECONCILIATION.

GRADUALLY and silently the reconciliation between Rev. R. J. Campbell, famous minister of the City Temple, London, and the conservative forces of British Church opinion has grown until it is now complete.

Chief token of its full consummation is found in the British Weekly upon whose pages the name of Mr. Campbell seems to appear nowadays more frequently than that of any other English preacher.

The significance of this fact will not appear to those who have forgotten that it was in his capacity as a department contributor to the British Weekly that Mr. Campbell fell into strained relations with Sir W. Robertson Nicol, its editor, because of certain utterances which the editor insisted must be blue-penciled and which Mr. Campbell insisted must stand as he had written them or not at all. This was the beginning of the most intense and deep-going agitation in the thought life of the Church in the present generation.

Mr. Campbell's department was cast out of the British Weekly, his teaching was attacked as heretical by its editor, and the preacher himself, hardly yet securely established in the pulpit made famous by the great Joseph Parker, was cast out of the synagogue of orthodoxy from Inverness to Lands End.

His church alone remained loyal, though insidious machinations were set going to undermine his people's fidelity to their brilliant leader.

Above his church door one Saturday night the word ICHABOD was written in huge letters which every worshiper read as he drew near the sanctuary on Sunday. The daily press was alive with the theological controversy for months and the religious press knew little else. Mr. Campbell retired from the scene of turmoil for three weeks and when he appeared again brought with him the manuscript of a book called "The New Theology" which Macmillans sold the world over by the tens of thousands and which still sells today.

When the heat of the controversy subsided Mr. Campbell's name was not so much as mentioned for several years in the columns of the orthodox British Weekly.

A CONSTRUCTIVE WEEKLY

But now Sir William, the editor, is personally taking up a collection to sustain daily intercession services on behalf of British arms and soldiers at City Temple, with Mr. Campbell as the central figure.

It is not simply the war that has melted the stupid hearts that fell into alienation over honest difference of theological opinion, for the melting has been in process some two or three years. But in the presence of the vast responsibility and horror of war their differences altogether melt away in a great common commanding devotion.

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

A LETTER came to this office during the past week, a portion of which we are passing on to our readers. The writer is a missionary in Korea. He is a member of the Southern Presbyterian Mission in Soon Chun, in the southern part of the country. It is a new station which he has helped to open. Of a most trying experience there in the first days of his work he writes:

We lost at one time our two precious children. They were beautiful and strong, healthy children, three and a half, and two and a half. Both were suddenly taken with the worst form of oriental dysentery, contracted we know not how, and as we had just moved to the new station to open up, no doctor was there, and when one came, he arrived too late. We buried both the same day.

Two days later my wife was taken down with the same fearful malady, and weakened by six days of constant nursing, had not the strength to resist the disease. Three doctors and a nurse who had been rushed to the place, gave her up. But that Sunday all over Korea prayer meetings were held by natives and foreigners; for the news had spread far.

I thought of you then for this reason. We had oftened discussed in class whether God heard and anwered prayer directly or whether the benefit from prayer was reflex. Standing that night all alone under an Eastern sky, many thousands of miles from my dear ones at home, with two newly made graves close by, and my wife just on the edge of eternity, and expecting that possibly, probably, tomorrow I would have to lay her by their side, I was conscious of the presence of a Person, and I had a quiet peace and assurance that only a personality can give, and I knew as I made my great surrender, that whether my wife lived or died, I had touched the other side, and He knew and understood and was ordering it all.

That day an antitoxin, much delayed, arrived and they gave it to her as a last resort, while the Koreans on the hills prayed. She awoke from a short nap that night and was better and said she would get well. Since then she has gotten back all her former stength. We both feel that great as was the cost, it was worth it all to know Him, and have a religious experience which was not based on faith alone, but on contact with a living, risen, unseen Friend.

I thought this might be of interest to you as a testimony from one who had spent a short time at the front. My wife, who was passionately fond of her little ones, and had never had a great religious experience, had such peace in her heart as she stood by the open graves and all during the day that she remarked that she could not understand it, until I reminded her that He had promised His peace in times like this, when all human power failed. I am satisfied, from my own experience, that while God does not answer our prayers in the sense of giving us just what we ask, every true prayer, definitely reaches the supreme personality, God, and that He gives a definite answer of that which He sees best for our highest good.

FOSTERING AMITY WITH JAPAN.

DR. DOREMUS SCUDDER of Honolulu is the pastor of one of the strongest congregations in the world, a congregation that has the reputation of supporting more foreign missionaries than any other church in Christendom.

He is a member of a famous family of scholars and missionaries. A brother of his is the greatest living authority on the sea life of the Pacific islands, and the author of a very important series of letters to Professor Romanes on scientific and religious matters.

Dr. Scudder has just returned to his home from a visit to Japan in the interest of good feeling between that country and the United States. Similar missions have been undertaken by President Eliot and Dr. Hamilton W. Mabie. And a visit of the same nature, only in the opposite direction, has just been completed by Dr. Sydney L. Gulick, for many years a missionary in Japan, who has spent several recent months journeying through the United States, in the effort to interpret to our people the real sentiments of the Sunrise Empire.

There are jingo voices in both lands that are lifted unceasingly in threats or hopes of war between the two peoples. There are vast military interests that would best be served by war. But the actual sentiment of both nations is in favor of permanent and honorable peace.

If we are willing to treat the Japanese people with the same courtesy with which we treat all others, we have no occasion to fear any disturbance of the peaceful relations now existing. It is the hope and the purpose of such international visitors as have been named to create and perpetuate the sentiments of good will across the Pacific.

COLLEGE CLUBS TO FIGHT THE SALOONS.

IT IS an encouragement to all lovers of good order and sobriety that the combat with the liquor traffic goes forward in so many ways and at a multitude of places.

Few realize what a campaign is being organized in the colleges and universities to recruit life-long enemies against the saloon. Yet the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association has clubs in a great number of the educational institutions of America, and more are organized each month.

This association is not partisan. Its purpose is to rally the educated youth of the land in an active and open fight for a saloonless land. And the assurance that the near future will see such a victory of the temperance forces rests in no small degree on the mobilization of this army of temperance in the colleges.

A Prayer at the Year's End

BY J. R. PERKINS.

FOR these I give thanks:

For the fullest year of beautiful friendships that my life has ever known; for the men who made room for me in already crowded hearts just because I needed the warmth and love thereof; for the men who looked into the crowd and saw those of great wealth, great authority, and great prestige, but beckoned for me; for the men who chose me as Jonathan chose David, as Socrates chose Plato, and as Jesus chose John.

I thank Thee, Lord, that I found men voicing with courage the ideals I had dreamed but was not brave enough to utter alone; for the men who would rather fail in business than to falter in justice; and for the men who have heartened me to return and grapple with age-long errors that have poisoned the sweet fountain of human life.

I give thanks today for the men I know and love who are dangerous only to that which works abomination and makes a lie in art and literature, in commerce and industry, in morals and religion; and I give thanks that they are pledged to principles whose practice will most nearly perfect every relation in life.

I thank Thee for the return of Jesus to the carpenter's bench to dignify every task of men; for the song of the builders who have caught his spirit; for the unity of life to be shaped by his words; and for the beautiful hope that shines with the splendor of suns.

The Larger Christian World

A Department of Interdenominational Acquaintance.

Federal Council Takes Important Steps.

The executive meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ of America, held in Richmond, Va., early in December, resulted in plans for forward movements that were world-wide in their interests. They plan to hold a world Congress of Christian Churches in London next summer. They started the formulation of plans for a world revival that will grow out of the conditions arising from the war. The council takes up and pushes also the plan for the use of part of public school hours, probably Wednesdays, for religious instruction of children, the same to be given in parish houses, not in public school buildings, and under direction of pastors of the churches. Larger measures have been decided on for religious work during the Panama-Pacific Exposition; for more effective work by chaplains of the navy, increased in number recently from 24 to 52; and for celebrations of anniversaries of great events like the martyrdom of John Huss, coming next July, and the start of the Protestant Reformation, occuring in the year 1917.

Preacher Wants Flexible Creed.

Rev. William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church of New York, spoke before the Sunday Evening Club of Chicago on Dec. 27 on "The Religion We Need Today." He said: "Forms, creeds and institutions of religions must be kept in their proper places. The moment a creed becomes a rigid rule or a fence it must be broken or it will break the religion it serves. No religion should wear its skeleton on the outside nor place its backbone to the front."

World Alliance for Peace.

One of the plans of the Church Peace Union is to organize the churches of the world in a permanent World Alliance of the Churches for Promoting International Friendship. A committee of twelve from the British churches has been named with headquarters in London with J. Allen Baker, M. P., as chairman, and Rt. Hon. W. H. Dickinson, M. P., as secretary. The chairman of the American group will be Rev. William Pierson Merrill, D. D., and the secretary is Rev. Frederic Lynch, D. D. Correspondence will be begun immediately with churches of the United States, inviting them to become members, as churches, of the Alliance.

President King Visits Chicago.

Dr. Henry Churchill King, president of Oberlin College, visited Chicago on Dec. 20, speaking before the Sunday Evening Club in Orchestra Hall on "Facing the Facts of Life." He mentioned a number of life problems and spoke of the necessity of developing a character that one would be willing to live with always. He said: "Every one of us must give an account of himself, for beyond death lies accountability and beyond accountability the future life. I am sure that if there is a future life each of us must live it out with himself, and we should so live here that we will be decent company for ourselves when we pass onward."

Rev. R. J. Patterson to Work in Chicago.

Rev. Robert J. Patterson, known as "Catch-My-Pal" Patterson of Belfast, Ireland, has been engaged by the Young People's Civic League, made up of the Christian Endeavor Societies, Epworth Leagues and Baptist Unions, to spend six months in Chicago working on his famous "Catch-my-Pal" lines. The plan is for him to hold meetings in churches all over the city and carry on a pledge signing campaign. His work in Ireland reclaimed 75,000 drinkers the first year and it is said that the values of public house properties in northern Ireland have depreciated fully 50 to 75 per cent. He is a very stirring speaker with the Irishman's gift of expression.

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan Recovers.

As was recently reported Dr. G. Campbell Morgan has been seriously ill in England. He is now making good recovery and was recently able to leave the home for convalescents and go to Gloucestershire for two weeks. From here he will go to Mundesley to remain until after Christmas. He will go to the south of England soon after the New Year.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, who is beginning a union meeting in Lima, Ohio.

Dr. Len Broughton is in Feeble Health.

Dr. Len Broughton, who recently received a call from a prominent Baptist Church in Boston, Mass., is not able to carry on his usual duties in connection with .Christ Church (Congregational) in London. During his enforced absence from the pulpit, his assistant is preaching for him. He has not announced his decision with regard to the call to Boston.

Preachers at the University of Chicago.

The University of Chicago is fortunate in securing some of the foremost preachers of the country to minister to the religious life of the university. Announcement is just made of the new university preachers for the winter quarter. On Jan. 10 and 17, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of Denver, Colo., who was formerly president of De Pauw University, will be the speaker; on Jan. 24, Dr. S. Parks Cadman, of Brooklyn; and on Jan. 31 and Feb. 7, Dr. Nehemiah Boynton of Brooklyn. Appointments are still to be made for Feb. 14 and Feb. 28, but on Feb. 21, Prof. Hugh Black, of Union Theological Seminary, New York, will be the speaker, and Dr. Cornelius Woelfkin, of the Calvary Baptist Church, New York, will give the addresses March 7 and March 14 (Convocation Sunday).

Dr. R. E. Speer at Ministers' Convention.

A Ministers' Missionary Convention, held at Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 7-9, is said to have been the first interdenominational missionary convention for ministers held in this country. Dr. Robert E. Speer spoke to 700 ministers who were in attendance on the subjects, "Missions and the European War" and "Conditions of Evangelizing the World." J. Campbell White, general secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, was present and presided. Dr. John Timothy Stone, the pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Chicago, spoke on "Enlisting Laymen as Personal Workers."

Chaplain for Immigrants Dies.

A conspicuous service was rendered the cause of religion and social uplift by the Rev. Dr. Lugschneider, who for a number of years has been chaplain at Ellis Island to the immigrants. He was maintained there by the City Mission Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He was able to converse in a dozen different languages and had access therefore to the vast majority of the immigrants. He also did considerable work in the Episcopal Church of San Salvatore, Broome St., New York, which has been maintained chiefly for Italians. He passed away recently and his loss is felt deeply by the religious workers of the great metropolis. His work was so unique that it is said there is no one in the ranks of the Episcopal clergy that is ready to take his place.

Orthodoxy in the Civil Courts.

The method of settling questions of orthodoxy in the civil courts is not so common as it once was but there was a recent case in North Dakota. The Lutheran Church in Grafton split over the question of plenary inspiration. In the lower courts the "anti-plenaries" won. When the case reached the supreme court, both parties had become so heterodox that the court dismissed the case.

Professor is Challenged by Dr. Jowett.

Dr. Thomas C. Hall is a professor in the Union Theological Seminary of New York. He has asserted at different times that "Great Britain made no secret of her growing jealousy of Germany." He also stated that "even her pulpits voiced the swelling anger." Dr. J. H. Jowett, who is pastor of the Fifth Ave. Presbyterian Church of New York, wrote to the professor asking for specifications of his charges. When these were not forthcoming, Dr. Jowett issued the following statement: "For some years the British and German ministers have been cultivating closer and more intimate friendships. A large deputation of German ministers visited England as the guests of their English brethren and were received with the deepest enthusiasm and affection. Many members of the deputation worshiped at the church in Birmingham where I was minister, and in the middle of the service an address of welcome was read in the name of the church and congregation."

A Minister at Ninety Years.

Rev. Charles H. Gates, a Congregational minister of Wilbraham, Mass., was ninety years old this year. He graduated from Andover in 1850 and in the following year he married and went west with the "Iowa Band." After sixteen years in the state of Iowa, he returned to the East and held a number of pastorates. At the age of eighty-three he felt he ought to retire but in 1909 he was given another call by a church he had formerly served. This call he decided to decline. He still reads good books and is in every way up to date. He still preaches on occasion. His life companion is still with him.

First Presbyterian Church in America.

The First Presbyterian Church to be built in America is still standing and is in constant use. It is located at Rehoboth on the eastern side of Maryland. This Presbyterian Church was established in 1706 by Rev. Francis Makemie, who was its first pastor and whose grave is not far from the historic building. Owing to the intolerant laws of Maryland, the building was built upon his own land. It was built of brick said to have been imported from Ireland. Thirty-three pastors have served the church in the meantime. This congregation now has 200 members and a fine Sunday-school. Rev. Henry G. Martin is the present pastor.

Presbyteries Vote Against Union.

The proposed union of United Presbyterians with the Presbyterians is being voted upon by a number of the Presbyteries of the United Presbyterian Church this fall. The votes are taken as indicative of sentiment in this communion. Both Keokuk and DesMoines Presbyteries in Iowa have voted against the proposed merger.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman at Lima, O.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman and Mr. Charles M. Alexander will begin a union evangelistic campaign in Lima, O., on Jan. 6 and they will continue during the month. They will have eight assistants in their company. The twenty ministers of the city are heartily in accord with the program and 2,000 workers are being made ready to take a religious census before the meetings begin. There will be a force of 400 personal workers who will assist during the progress of the meetings. There will be a series of cottage prayer-meetings in advance of the coming of the evangelistic company.

Medical Missionary Conference.

In spite of the confusion in mission fields as a result of the war in Europe, the interest and attendance at the sixth Interdenominational Medical Missionary Conference, held at Battle Creek, Mich., Nov. 17-20, were in nowise diminished. Probably 200 workers from home and foreign fields attended the meeting, which was presided over by Bishop E. R. Hendrix, of Kansas City. Among the most notable addresses delivered were the following: "Medicine in China," Rev. Isaac T. Headland, Pekin, China; "Better Organization for the Medical Work," Rev. Levi B. Salmans, Mexico; "Physiologic Therapeutics on the Mission Field," Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Battle Creek Sanitarium; "Forty-five Years in Asiatic Turkey," Rev. George C. Reynolds, M. D., D. D., Van, Turkey; "The Outlook for Missions in View of the War," Bishop Eugene R. Hendrix, D. D. The conference will meet again in 1915 in the same city, the sessions being held at a local sanitarium.

A New Lutheran Weekly Appears.

The American Lutheran Survey, a new weekly of the Lutheran denomination, has immediately taken a place among denominational papers. It is published at Columbia, South Carolina. The price has been put at $3 per year.

Baptists Discuss Open Membership.

The State Secretaries and Superintendents' Association of the Baptists met recently in Cleveland. This organization is composed of leaders in both state and city missions. Dr. Hugh A. Heath, of Massachusetts, spoke on the topic, "Is there a Place in Baptist Polity for a Community Church?" The discussion that followed was one of the most interesting of the convention. Dr. Heath declared that he did not believe in open church membership but felt that in some way the weak churches in a given community ought to get together for co-operative service. Just how this can be done without leading to open church membership or to the compromise of Baptist principles constituted the heart of the discussion. Dr. Frank Anderson and Dean Shailer Mathews, both of Chicago, were among the speakers.

Saloon Advertises on Church Steps.

A liquor advertisement on the steps of a church is a sight to make any man stop and look again. On Woodward Ave., in Detroit, is a Congregational building which was abandoned by the congregation to move into a better edifice. The building stands empty and dilapidated and is plastered by the bill-board man. On the very steps of the building and barricading the entrance is a sign advertising a well-known kind of beer. The reaction from such advertising does not in the least help the cause of the liquor men, and the whole incident is a parable to those who are thoughtful.

The War Hurts Waldensians.

War has distracted the attention of the European friends of the Waldensians, the Protestants of Italy, and the income of $50,000 a year that came from various friends outside Italy in Europe has stopped. This brave group of evangelicals are issuing an appeal from their American headquarters in New York for the American friends to make up this deficit so the work of the Waldensian missionaries may not suffer loss. Some American denominations are keeping out of Italy and helping the Waldensians instead. Doubtless these organizations will take a special interest in the appeal.

Presbyterians Censure License Men.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, of New York, who writes a great deal of press matter for metropolitan newspapers, spoke against the movement in California this fall for state-wide prohibition. He said that prohibition "would be a short-sighted contribution to the cause of sound and wholesome temperance." The Temperance Board of the Presbyterian denomination met in Pittsburgh on Dec. 7 and passed a resolution dissenting from the views of Dr. Parkhurst. These resolutions state that the views of Dr. Parkhurst are very much at variance with those of the denomination as a whole. Coincident with all this, a movement to make it an ecclesiastical offense for any Presbytery to favor license, has significance.

Pastor Works at Own Charges.

Dr. R. M. Stevenson is a Presbyterian pastor who has done a valuable home mission service in California, ministering at his own charges to the churches at East Oaks and Orangevale. In the latter place the Disciples have disbanded and most of them have entered the Presbyterian Church, thus making the one church able to live, through the removal of competition.

Union Church Employment Bureau.

Rev. Chas. Stelzle, known all over America in every denomination for his service in connection with the department of labor in the Presbyterian denomination, has become the executive head of a recently organized interchurch committee on unemployment. The committee is composed of Protestants, Catholics and Jews. The movement was started by the New York Federation of Churches. The chairman of the committee is Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, of Brooklyn. It is thought that the agencies of organized religion will be made much more efficient in social service in this way.

Des Moines is Stirred.

Rev. "Billy" Sunday is in DesMoines these days and during the first five weeks there 8,194 persons professed conversion. The illness of the aged mother of Mr. Sunday called him to Winona Lake, Ind., on Dec. 6, but he returned to his task two days later.

Baptists Promote Education.

The Board of Education of the Northern Baptists has appointed a number of its members to speak in ministers' meetings and churches on invitation and explain the situation of the Baptists with reference to education and to plead for larger co-operation on the part of the denomination. Among those who will go out on these journeys are some educators and preachers very eminent in the denomination. The list of speakers includes the names of President W. H. P. Faunce, Rev. A. K. Foster, Rev. J. M. Stifler and Prof. E. D. Burton.

Baptist Seminary Grows.

The Kansas City Baptist Theological Seminary is having the best attendance of its entire history this year. There are twenty-six new students enrolled. From many quarters come the reports of an increased attendance in the seminaries, some reporting a doubled attendance. These facts would seem to indicate that the dearth of ministerial students is over.

Baptists Strong in Texas.

The Texas State Convention of Baptists was recently held in Abilene, and the state organization reported that 117 churches had been organized the past year and 449 Sunday-schools. The state organization pays part or all of the salary of 482 missionary pastors. There are 600,000 Baptists in a section which has a total population of less than four million, which indicates how strong this denomination is in the Lone Star state.

An Evangelistic Team in Louisville.

The Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention is conducting a simultaneous evangelistic campaign in the white Baptist churches of Louisville, Ky. Pastors have been brought in from other cities to do the preaching. These are all under the general direction of Dr. Weston Bruner. Thirty colored churches in the city have caught the spirit of the occasion and will hold special services in twelve centers.

Here and There

HAS CHRISTIANITY FAILED?

This is the question thousands of people have been asking for months. A mad youth throws a bomb and at the same moment throws Europe into a frenzy. That act of folly made eleven nations lose their reason. A deadly weapon in a man's hand made Europe bristle with death. Two deaths by assassination are the occasion of tens of thousands of other deaths. When that youth reverted to primitive law the Christian nations of Europe did the same thing. Instead of fighting with clubs they fight with scientific engines which are of the twentieth century, but with a spirit that is of the stone age. It is Edison's brain in the skull of a savage. The nations are prostrate in this moment of panic. The reason of the wisest is flooded with madness. Where now is our boasted heroism that can look calamity in the face and be calm? What of the strength born of Christian faith that could front a sea of troubles and never falter? Have we any Christianity, or is what we are supposed to have the thinnest veneer that would crack under unusual pressure? The Christian wonders and doubts. The worldling says, "I told you so." The infidel scoffs while the edifice, according to him, is toppling into ruin.

Christianity has often failed, but the failure is not irreparable. It failed when Judas became traitor and when Peter confirmed his denials with oaths, even when Christianity was scarcely born. It failed during those stormy days of debate when brotherly love became wolf-like, and teeth and claws showed the zeal of the defenders of dogmas. It failed many a time through the Dark Ages, and has failed again and again since that period. Christianity has failed as often as men have allowed it to fail. The patient cannot subscribe to the virtues of a remedy that he has thrown out of the window. The patient dies, though the remedy is as effective as ever, despite its rejection. Indeed, the failures of Christianity are so many that we could almost wish for another religion to take its place!

The real question recurs, have we ever taken Christianity seriously? and the entire subject is so lucidly summed up in an article in the Biblical World by Prof. Shailer Mathews that I take the liberty of transcribing a number of sentences.

> War puts that question to us with terrible frankness. We acknowledge Jesus as Lord but do we keep His commandments? We have prophesied in His name and in His name done many mighty works. But does He really know us as those who are taking up their crosses and following Him?
> The evidence of our real confidence in Him does not lie in accepting dogmas concerning His person and nature. Orthodoxy no more than socialism has kept men from war. Millions of men who pray to the same Trinity, repeat the same creed, and anathematize the same heresies are busily engaged in killing each other. Militarism and false philosophies of history have made men forget Jesus, or have led them into making him a new God of war with a helmet in place of the crown of thorns, carrying a rifle instead of a cross.
> Greek Orthodox, Roman Catholic, Lutheran, Anglican, Presbyterian, all of whom make identical confessions regarding the God-man, are killing each other with the same avidity as if there had never been a Jesus.
> Is it Christ-like to exploit another's misery?
> War bids us measure the beam in our own eye.
> Is the Sermon on the Mount good instruction for militarism? Do soldiers put the Golden Rule into their knapsacks?
> Is "love your enemies" printed on battle flags?
> Did the soldiers or Jesus go to the cross to save the world?
> Men tell us we must have war in order to be strong.
> Jesus taught us that we must become great by sacrificial service like His own.
> Men tell us that we must build up the nation's morale by economic policies.
> Jesus taught us that we cannot serve God and Mammon.
> Men tell us that we must fight for our rights.
> Jesus told us by word and by example that we must die for other people's rights.
> Men tell us we must learn to fight, kill and hate if we are to dwell in safety as a nation.
> Jesus told us that God is love and that the way to peace is through a life that refuses to countenance hate, and prefers loyalty to the crucified Christ to comforts with political super-men.

Such utterances as these go to the core of the question. There are no failures in Christianity. The failures become colossal as men ignore the spirit of its Founder, trample under foot his holy life, and do violence to every utterance of the New Testament. Because of the failure Europe will be reaping harvests of hate and bloodshed for years to come.

"They that live by the sword shall perish by the sword."

OUR ADVENTURES IN UNION EVANGELISM.

It is good to see some Disciple evangelists leading in union meetings. Some may consider this innovation a departure from the faith. To me, the innovation is a part of the faith. The wonder is not that they are holding union meetings but that they should not have done so from the beginning of our history. Imagine a people contending for Christian unity committed to the absurdity of not holding union meetings! Could anything be more insincere to those who have never been trained in certain subtleties concerning the "whole" gospel?

We ought to remember that there are hundreds of meetings held by Disciples evangelists in Disciples churches where the gospel in its entirety is never preached. Of course by a full gospel, a whole gospel, or an entire gospel, some mean faith, repentance, and baptism. But we all know that that is not a full-orbed gospel. Even anything like fullness in the fundamentals must ever be approximate in an evangelistic meeting.

How many sermons do we hear in our churches during special meetings on baptism for the remission of sins? How many of our evangelists preach on the work of the Holy Spirit with any grasp of that theme? How many points of agreement on that subject would there be in the sermons of six of our most prominent evangelists? So when we come to speak of a whole gospel we use language with a considerable degree of latitude. We always take a great deal for granted.

But we do co-operate in meetings held by such evangelists as R. A. Torrey, Wilbur Chapman, and "Billy" Sunday. Our churches have heartily entered into these. If it is proper for us thus to do how can it be wrong for our own men to lead union meetings? If it is right to follow it is right to lead. If we endorse such union evangelism as fostered by these well-known men, how can it be right to push our own evangelists into the rear, as if our endorsement of others were the doom of our own? What is fair for one is fair for the other. And we believe that our own men come nearer preaching the gospel in its completeness than do the denominational evangelists who have had the endorsement of our churches for many years.

Whether the Disciples shall adopt union evangelism or not, one thing is certain, we are losing our sensitiveness on the subject which boded disaster to our peace ten or a dozen years ago. Then—!!!!!  ??? Now—everything quiet on the Potomac.

Thus the world wags on its unwearied way, and our little systems have their day.

THE DISCUSSION OVER EVANGELISM.

My countrymen, keep it up. Let not the sun go down upon your noble endeavors. The discussion warms the cockles of my heart. It steels me against the wiles of the adversary; and steals o'er my senses like music o'er a bank of violets, or words to that effect. We are getting down to business on this matter of evangelism. These recurring discussions show that there is something awry. The latter-day evangelism is wonderfully effective, but it needs to be purged of some accretions that it has taken on. We have made a long stride forward in recent years in our discussions of the subject. One may raise an objection to certain types of evangelism now without being regarded as a fit subject for the lunatic asylum. One may object to a method without being called a heretic, a sectarian, or a parallelopipedon. We may even carry on a discussion without any fear of the heavens falling or of the sea's becoming dry land. Time was when those who dared to raise a question about methods were charged with wicked motives. For all the advance we have made since those days, which are still fresh in the minds of the living, let us thank God and take courage.

We are really past the point where a Platitudinarian will answer an objector by calling him a Latitudinarian.

GROWING OLD GRACEFULLY.

When Dumas, the master of romance, was asked how he grew old so gracefully, his inimitable answer was, "Madame, I give all my time to it!"

As time moves the calendar along, and the years roll up, and we are inclined to settle back into indolent easy-chairs and let the world go by, then comes the peril of our becoming rusty and crusty—the has-beens of the past, the left-outs of the present; and we shall begin to wonder if such a fate be inevitable.

It surely is not, but, like many ills, the cure lies in prevention. "What shall I do to be saved" from the fate of the forgotten—the back numbers—when the more insistent duties of life are wholly or partly laid aside, owing to the flight of time?

The answer is easy. Cultivate your fads, your hobbies! Take up some study or pursuit, anything that is enjoyable. It may not be useful, but it cannot be useless if it fills the hours with contentment. "True rest is not idleness." No one wearies over a pursuit where he enjoys the pursuing. His mind and hand are happily employed, and his enthusiastic interest keeps mind and heart alert.

THE MEANING OF BAPTISM

By CHARLES CLAYTON MORRISON
Editor of THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

A REVIEW.

By W. T. Moore.

Having carefully read "The Meaning of Baptism" from cover to cover, I desire to say a few words about it in the spirit of candid criticism.

The style is simplicity itself. There is no attempt at fine writing, or anything that savors of pretense. The author is evidently in earnest, and if his conclusions are not admissible it cannot be chargeable to any defect in his rhetoric. In some places his treatise reads like a romance, and in most places it is practically a romance, for it is evidently founded upon fiction.

The spirit is also fine. Except for here and there a streak of dogmatism (such as when he affirms certain things are true right in the face of overwhelming facts to the contrary) there is nothing in the spirit of the book to offend the most delicate literary taste. This much should be highly commended. If Christians cannot discuss the great questions pertaining to their religion without calling each other names, or what is worse, attributing to each other, unworthy motive, it would be a good thing if no more books or even journals should be published until they have at least learned that courtesy which the apostle heartily commends.

My main trouble with the book is its logic. It appears to me to be built mainly on fallacies. Its fundamental thesis is that baptizo does not mean to immerse and that Mr. Campbell made a great mistake in the translation of this term, and also of baptisma in his "Living Oracles." But Mr. Morrison's mistake is in assuming that Mr. Campbell was writing a commentary instead of making a translation. Mr. Campbell was evidently aiming to give a true translation of the original Greek in clear, modern English, and to do this he was simply shut up to the Greek lexicons as to the meaning of original words. Now, Mr. Morrison will scarcely deny that these lexicons practically with unanimity support Mr Campbell's translation. No one will contend that the meaning of the anglicized word baptism now means immersion only or its equivalent. Our English dictionaries define the word as it is now used, though even in this case most of them refer to the original Greek for the meaning of immersion which is one of the meanings which they give. But Mr. Campbell was seeking for the original meaning of baptism so that he might correct the modern meaning as he was endeavoring to correct a great many perversions of original Christianity as practised in these modern times.

AUTHOR'S METHOD UNSATISFACTORY.

Mr. Morrison's method is not at all satisfactory in dealing with this subject. He quotes a few passages of Scripture and then substitutes the word immersion for baptism, and then significantly smiles at the phraseology; but this is one of the paedo-baptist tricks, which is no new thing under the sun. But any reasonable person who will stop to think will know that the changed phraseology seems incongruous simply because we are not used to it. It is simply sound and not sense that seems to be objectionable. The fact is the term baptism can no longer be regarded as a Greek word. It has been anglicized, rantisized and sectarianized until it now has no definite meaning at all, but means almost anything to suit the theology of the sect that uses it. But Mr. Campbell aimed to give a faithful translation of the Greek, as it was used in the time of Christ, as he was aiming to restore Christianity as it was taught by Christ and his apostles. It would have been the absurdity of absurdities if Mr. Campbell had used the term "initiation," as suggested by Mr. Morrison. Some experiments of this kind have been made and have been abandoned. One edition of Liddell and Scott's great lexicon gave one of the meanings of baptizo to "sprinkle," but the scholarship of the world cried out so vehemently against this definition that in the next edition of the lexicon the word "sprinkle" was expunged. I have in my library a very beautiful translation of the New Testament in good modern English, but the translator, in order to avoid the controversy with respect to baptism uses the word "purification" instead of baptism. But in a personal interview with him, he confessed to me that in this respect he had made a mistake and intended to drop the word "purification" in subsequent editions of his work.

A "UNIQUE METHOD" OF LOGIC.

But Mr. Morrison has a unique method in his logic. When he wishes to support his own cause he takes the most doubtful testimony without even intimating that it is doubtful. But when he refers to the testimony of those who differ from him he questions every scrap of that evidence that can be found. For instance, his main support for insisting on giving the meaning of "initiation" to baptism is based upon what is called "Jewish proselyte baptism." Again and again he refers to this baptism in support of his contention because this baptism was an initiation into the Jewish institution. But Mr. Morrison ought to know that the best scholarship of the world contends that there is not a particle of trustworthy evidence that any such thing as Jewish proselyte baptism existed in the time of Christ, or indeed even before the fourth century, at any rate it did not exist until after the destruction of the temple and was contemporaneous with the introduction of all kinds of theological absurdities, both Jewish and Christian. Nevertheless, Mr. Morrison's whole contention is mainly supported by a supposed baptism of which neither Philo, Josephus, nor the Targum of Onkelos makes any mention whatever. It is not here assumed that no such baptism really existed at the time of Christ; for the doctrine of silence has its limitations, but surely fairness in discussion ought to have suggested to Mr. Morrison that the use he makes of Jewish proselyte baptism is based upon a very insecure foundation, if indeed it is not wholly unjustifiable. But when Mr. Morrison deals with his opponents he demands chapter and verse for everything and will accept of no testimony of a doubtful character whatever. For instance he challenges even the canonical character of the commission as recorded by Matthew, and insists that this cannot be allowed to support what he is pleased to call the "dogma of baptism." But there it stands in the New Testament without the shadow of a well supported argument against its canonicity. But Jewish proselyte baptism can be used by Mr. Morrison without the slightest hint that there is no substantial proof for its existence in the time of Christ at all.

Of course, this method of reasoning will enable one to prove anything he may wish. Given the privilege of making out own definition of words and our own facts of history, then we can gallop along the road of error without the fear of being halted by any knight of the quill no matter what may be the real facts of the case.

But more astounding still is Mr. Morrison's foundation for his meaning of baptism. Even if proselyte baptism was practised in the time of Christ all authorities agree that when it was practised in the fourth century the proselyte was circumcised, baptized, and then a sacrifice offered. Now will Mr. Morrison be willing to use the whole ceremony of initiation in entering the Christian church? If not, why not? By what authority has he the right to pick and choose in using this ceremony in support of his contention?

"WORST YET TO COME."

But the worst is yet to come. If Mr. Morrison invalidates the commission as recorded by Matthew, and explains away the meaning of John 3:5, he has, by that much at least, according to his own theory, made it impossible to enter the Christian church at all; for, if baptism is the only door into that church, as he contends, then what becomes of the chance to enter if that door is taken away?

But Mr. Morrison's contention, so far as the Disciples of Christ are concerned, has no practical content. From the beginning of their religious movement until the present time, Disciples have strenuously contended that a religious immersion meant vastly more than the mere physical act of a plunge under water, and consequently it must be preceded by the proper antecedents as well as accompanied by the proper sanctions, such as the Scriptures enjoin. In other words whatever belongs to baptism, in its full New Testament meaning, attaches equally to immersion where it is used for the same purpose as the original word was used; that is, immersion carries with it all the meaning of baptism that baptism carries when the words are used for the same purpose, and no one uses immersion in a religious sense for any other purpose than the original word, baptisma signifies. From this point of view Mr. Morrison's whole contention amounts to really "much ado about nothing."

THE FORM OF BAPTISM.

I cannot close this altogether too brief notice of Mr. Morrison's book without referring to another phase of the subject—other than the form of baptism. Mr. Morrison strenuously objects to infant baptism, and yet his book is intended to offer an irenicon for the union of Christians. I cannot now enter upon this important subject, but so far as Disciples are concerned, they are much more interested in believer's baptism, and therefore, more opposed to infant sprinkling, than they are to any particular form of baptism, and it follows that even if it could be shown that immersion is not essential to a valid baptism the real barrier to Christian union would still remain in the practice of what is called infant baptism. I do not now say that no concessions must be made with respect to the baptismal question in order to Christian union, but I do say that Mr. Morrison has not met the chief difficulty even if his contention be true. Hence his cry against the sectarianism of those who contend for immersion is altogether out of place until the greater difficulties are removed. Most men are not willing to be regarded as illiterate or ignorant even for so good a cause as Christian union.

An Educational Leader

Review of "The Church School," by Walter S. Athearn.

BY ROBERT P. SHEPHERD.

The man who goes over a new route, who goes over it till he thoroughly knows the way, has opportunity to measure with scientific care the rough places. That man has a right to blaze his way so that others who must follow along the same track can be both forewarned and safely guided.

Professor Walter S. Athearn has proved himself to be one of the most inspiring teachers of teachers in America.

Dr. R. P. Shepherd.

With the enthusiasm of the born leader he works as faithfully with and for the untaught and unskilled and unskilful as for trained pedagogues who are taking graduate courses. In the field of religious pedagogy Professor Athearn has won his place among foremost leaders.

Quite fittingly Professor Athearn blazes the trail through the Church School, which is the logical successor of the Sunday-school. Driven, by other purposes, to make an exhaustive study of the classified literature of religious education, he naturally wished to do for others in this field what scientific research has so generously done for teachers in the purely secular field.

But a bare annotated list of books would fail utterly to give the needed service. The compelling "why" of the different principles treated in the many works needed to be clearly discussed. Being in close association with many types of teachers in his own department of Drake University and in the City Institute of Des Moines, Professor Athearn had abundant opportunity to develop effective approaches to the available literature. Hence the book, which has quickly come to be one of the best sellers published by the Pilgrim Press.

Probably the author's own words will give surest insight into the purpose which the work admirably achieves.

"The theories herein advocated have been put to practical test under the author's observation. He believes that the principles of the church school set forth in this volume must be put into operation in every community which seeks the religious culture of its youth. This program will cost money and it will require trained leadership, but it will produce results."

Every church in the land would be immensely profited if its pastors could be persuaded to call all church leaders into weekly conference, preferably at the prayer-meeting hour, and talk over with them at some length the situation set forth in the first three chapters of the book. Indeed, if the entire winter should be spent in generous weekly discussions of all the twelve chapters, it is reasonably certain that those present would do more effective praying in a few minutes at the close of each discussion than is commonly drawn out drowsily through an entire prayer-meeting hour. The reason so many prayer-meetings have dwindled and died is simple, people have nothing much to pray about. Not many pages of this book could be intelligently read or discussed without putting someone into penitential and contrite prayer.

Note the significance of the number of pages devoted to different departments of the church school:

Cradle Roll, 18.
Beginners, 29.
Primary, 35.
Junior, 53.
Intermediate, 71.
Senior, 35.
Adult, 13.
Home, 6.
Teacher Training, 11.

If there is any failure to catch the significance of this spacing, a study of the work will quickly supply the needed insight.

Surely there is nothing clannish in rejoicing when a man trained to undenominational thinking is accorded generous recognition by the alert leaders of Christian education in this country. Disciples of Christ would come far closer practicing their plea and proving their central doctrines if they faithffully followed the leadership set forth in "The Church School." [This book may now be obtained from the Disciples Publication Society. It is a volume of 324 pages, bound in buckram, and sells at $1. Pilgrim Press, Boston, publishers.]

The New Year of St. Nicholas Magazine.

Easily the most important and interesting of the features planned for the new year of St. Nicholas is the new serial by Frances Hodgson Burnett, "The Lost Prince," which begins in the November number and will run through twelve months of the magazine. Mrs. Burnett has based her new story on a legend in a certain European country that, 500 years ago, while a ruthless and unpopular king was in power, his son, a youth of noble qualities and much beloved by his people, mysteriously disappeared, and, upon the death of his father, a new dynasty came to the throne. Though the story of the lost prince has been handed down through the centuries. "The Lost Prince" of Mrs. Burnett's story is the descendant in our own time of the Lost Prince of 500 years ago; and his story is that of "a boy who is a prince but does not know he is one, making his way through Europe in the guise of a stalwart little tramp, but secretly carrying a message and a sign, to stray men in crowded streets, at palace gates, in forests and on mountain sides—he himself ignorant of all but that he must obey and pass on in silence. Other serial features of the new volume of St. Nicholas include "Peg O' the Ring; or a Maid of Denewood," by Emilie Benson Knipe and Alden Arthur Knipe; "The Boarded-up House," by Augusta Huiell Seaman, author of "Little Mam'selle of the Wilderness;" "Silver-heels," a story for younger boys and girls, by Gabrielle A. Jackson, author of "Denise and Ned Toodles;" and an adventure yarn specially for older boys, telling the adventures (real adventures, too) of two American lads in Mexico. The title is "Chained Lightning," and the author is Ralph Graham Taber, who himself has had many of the experiences he pictures. The publishers, the Century Co., Union Square, New York, are offering to new subscribers the October, November and December numbers free; and the year of 1915 complete for the usual subscription price of $3.

Some Books of Fiction.

Gideon's Band. By George W. Cable. A new book by the author of "The Grandissimes" and other stories of Louisiana life of some years back. This is a tale of life on the Mississippi before the war—the Civil, of course. It tells of the rivalry between the Hayles and the Courteneys, boat owners and builders, and has an innocent love affair to lend charm. Withal, the story has a happy ending. (Scribners, New York: $1.35 net.)

The Clean Heart. By A. S. M. Hutchinson. The hero of this book, by the author of "The Happy Warrior," is Wriford, who was freed of his egotism by the tragedies that came into his life. He learned thereby the philosophy wrapped up in these words, "The secret of being happy is not to think so much about yourself." (Little, Brown & Co., New York. $1.35 net.)

The New Clarion. By Will N. Harbin. A story of Georgia that will keep you interested. Smiles and sighs alternately rest you. A first rate love story, including a trial of the lover for his life, are enough to add a glow to a jaded reader's mentality. (Harper & Brothers, New York. $1.35 net.)

Winning the Wilderness. By Margaret Hill McCarter. A pleasing tale of the pioneers, who "do have an triumphant battle with scorching heat, cruel cold, killing winds, loneliness, solitude, fearsome drought, the devastating grasshopper and ruinous floods." Early Kansas is the scene of the story, with Virginian emigrants as the actors. (A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. $1.35 net.)

The Street of Seven Stars. By Mary Roberts Rinehart. The scene is laid in Vienna. Human, sweet, wholesome; pronounced by critics Mrs. Rinehart's "best yet." (Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston. $1.35 net.)

The Copy-Cat and Other Stories. By Mary E. Wilkins Freeman. In this book this distinguished American author is truly herself, with her sympathetic interpretation of youth, child and mellow age. Humor and pathos are pleasingly mingled. (Harper, New York. $1.25 net.)

Judges 6:11-40. Memory Verses, 14-16

Golden Text.—Blessed is the man whom thou choosest. Ps. 65:4.

American Standard Bible.
Copyright, 1901, by Thomas Nelson & Sons.
(Used by permission.)

(11) And the angel of Jehovah came, and sat under the oak which was in Ophrah, that pertained unto Joash the Abiezrite: and his son Gideon was beating out wheat in the winepress, to hide it from the Midianites. (12) And the angel of Jehovah appeared unto him, and said unto him, Jehovah is with thee, thou mighty man of valor. (13) And Gideon said unto him, Oh, my lord, if Jehovah is with us, why then is all this befallen us? and where are all his wondrous works which our fathers told us of, saying, Did not Jehovah bring us up from Egypt? but now Jehovah hath cast us off, and delivered us into the hand of Midian. (14) And Jehovah looked upon him, and said, Go in this thy might, and save Israel from the hand of Midian: have not I sent thee? (15) And he said unto him, Oh, Lord, wherewith shall I save Israel? behold, my family is the poorest in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house. (16) And Jehovah said unto him, Surely I will be with thee, and thou shalt smite the Midianites as one man.

(33) Then all the Midianites and the Amalekites and the children of the east assembled themselves together; and they passed over, and encamped in the valley of Jezreel. (34) But the spirit of Jehovah came upon Gideon; and he blew a trumpet; and Abiezer was gathered together after him. (35) And he sent messengers throughout all Manasseh; and they also were gathered together after him: and he sent messengers unto Asher, and unto Zebulun, and unto Naphtali; and they came up to meet them.

(36) And Gideon said unto God, If thou wilt save Israel by my hand, as thou hast spoken, (37) behold, I will put a fleece of wool on the threshing-floor; if there be dew on the fleece only, and it be dry upon all the ground, then shall I know that thou wilt save Israel by my hand, as thou hast spoken. (38) And it was so; for he rose up early on the morrow, and pressed the fleece together, and wrung the dew out of the fleece, a bowlful of water. (39) And Gideon said unto God, Let not thine anger be kindled against me, and I will speak but this once: let me make trial, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; let it now be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew. (40) And God did so that night: for it was dry upon the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground.

Verse by Verse.

BY ASA MCDANIEL.

11. The angel of Jehovah came. The word translated "angel" is found in Hebrew only in a concrete sense, as messenger or agent. In all the old accounts of such appearances the angel or messenger is identified with Jehovah. Gen. 16:7-14; 21:17-19; 31:11-13; Ex. 3:2. As the real character and nature of Jehovah began to be apprehended, the personal appearance of Jehovah among men came to be untenable, and angels or messengers came to represent God. And sat. Sat down like a wayfarer seeking rest in the shade. The oak. An holy tree. Ophrah. Ophrah of the Abiezrites. The exact site is unknown.

12. Jehovah said unto him. There was harmony of spirit, or Gideon should not have recognized the call of Jehovah. Jehovah is with thee. An assertion of encouragement in the presence of doubt. Thou mighty man of valor. The past life of Gideon won for him this reputation. See v. 11.

14. Jehovah looked upon. Turned to him. Go in this thy might. The might made visible in his powerful frame and vigorous strokes of his staff, made all the stronger by his consciousness of the presence of God.

15. Wherewith shall I save Israel. Gideon remonstrates that he is not equal to the task. He hesitated because the people lacked faith in God, and because of the strength of the enemy. His small family did not insure a large following in Manasseh or the other tribes.

16. I will be with thee. See notes on v. 14. Also compare Ex. 3:12, for the author may have had this verse in mind when recasting the sentence. As one man. Completely and without exception. Num. 14:15.

33. Read verses 25-33. Assembled themselves together. On the east side of the Jordan. Passed over. They crossed over the Jordan into "the Valley of Jezreel," so called from the city Jezreel, situated on a spur projecting from the Gilboa range. Until quite recent times the Bedawin of the country made excursions into the Great Plain.

34. The spirit of Jehovah came upon Gideon. Literal, put him on, as a garment, clothed itself with him. A man the garment of the Divine Spirit! A great responsibility and a mighty power for good. Abiezer was gathered together. He raised his own clan. v. 11.

35. Came up to meet them. They went up in a military sense to meet the Midianites.

36. As thou hast spoken. These words refer to verses 14-16. He that hath might enough to deliver Israel, hath not might enough to keep himself from doubt.—Bp. Hall. Because of it Gideon wanted another sign.

38. Early. His anxiety was to be sure that no one had tampered with it he went to the threshing floor early in the morning.

39. Let not thine anger be kindled against me. The severity of the Mosaic Law has been much exaggerated. Nothing could be more tender than the way in which God bore with the weak faith of Gideon as of Moses before him. (Ex. 4:10-17). Wherever there is a spark of faith, he is ever revealed as dealing tenderly with it that it may have time to grow into a flame.—Camb. Bible.

40. God did so that night. Jehovah always does his part, and by his faithfulness encourages his servants to do their part in the work of life.

Making Over a Man

The Lesson in Today's Life.

BY JOHN R. EWERS.

The Book of Judges is a human interest story. The pictures are painted in bright colors like a child's story book. Heroes and heroines abound. And if the truth be told we never tire of looking at pictures. We enjoy our kodaks; we look through the magazines to see the pictures; we visit the art galleries—it is all of a piece. The one part of the sermon which you remember is the good illustration. There is something wrong with the man who does not like pictures. Today we turn on this ancient "Movie" entitled "Gideon—the farmer hero."

Rev. John R. Ewers.

AN ANGEL CAME.

An angel is God's messenger. That messenger comes in many forms. A child may lead, the postman leaves a letter, the phone rings, a friend drops in, a stranger rings the door-bell, a song touches the heart, a book stirs the soul, a preacher kindles or a teacher thrills. These all may be angels.

WHILE HE WORKED.

Gideon was busy with his old flail pounding out, in monotonous fashion, the wheat. He was not thinking of angels; he was wondering whether he would be able to save his crop and perhaps he was figuring out how he might spare a little for the needy, for he had a big heart. He was not sleeping under a tree; he was not keeping other men from work; he was on the job and God called him.

MIGHTY MAN.

Gideon did not realize his own power. He was a steady citizen. He had always worked hard. His muscles were like iron. He had thought deeply about the conditions in Israel. He had wondered whether God was on his side at all. There was no yellow streak in him. He was clean and solid—a latent hero. The voice said, "The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valor." It was a good angel and the call was to noble efforts. You can tell the origin of your call by what it demands of you. You can test your religious emotions with the acid of unselfishness.

YOU CAN DO IT.

One of the greatest services which you can ever afford is to make a man believe in himself. A young man said to me the other day, "I would become a preacher if I thought I could ever preach." He is preparing for the ministry now. To convince people that they can teach a class, lead a meeting, call upon the sick, do personal work, help in a reform, find new scholars is fine business. It is big business. "You can be a Christian." "You can do it." And he does.

POOR FAMILY.

Gideon began to make excuses as usual. Some one had humbled his spirit long before by calling attention to his poor family. He had never forgotten that thrust. It had pierced his heart. Let the proud families of wealth, culture and position send out the heroes, he was only a plain man destined to work with the hoe. He did not know that he had the heroic heart. He did not know that he was the best man in all Israel. The angel told him and that is the reason the angel was good. What a wonderful thing it is to go forth with this message of confidence. Come on Grant, come on Lincoln, never mind those gibes about your families. Come on, you have heroic hearts. Ten boys in your Sunday-school need that message today. Suppose you go and tell them. I think of John right now. His mother is a widow and brought up five good sons, alone. "John," I say, "you have the stuff in you. You can do it." And John will.

THAT NEW SPIRIT.

"The spirit of the Lord came upon Gideon." Did you ever see that? As God's angel you create this confidence in this boy or man. You make him believe in himself. You make him believe that God is on his side. You make him believe that he is able to do this large thing. Ah, now watch for the miracle! See him do it! You have seen the spirit of God come upon men. A new set of interests, a wonderful loyalty to the church, a particular loyalty to their own work in the church, a deepening consecration, a new power in prayer, a new note in the voice—he is transformed. "There is a sweeter note in the voice, a gentler touch to the hand, a greater capacity for loving in the heart." No nobler mission awaits us than that of forgetting some of our presumed importance and going out to say to the men, "The Lord is with thee, thou mighty man of valor."

What Miss Lemert Did in Eureka, Ill.

A REPORT AND AN APPRECIATION.

By Verle W. Blair.

Nearly a century ago there lived in Illinois a Christian woman by the name of Mrs. Rumina Spencer, who, in a unique way, was active in religious work. Her most intimate friends, the strong men and women who knew her, said, "She is fifty years ahead of her time." She was a student to the very last, the big table in the living room being loaded with the best literature of the day, in front of which lay her well worn copy of the Bible. Great teachers and preachers of her time visited her to consult about the things of the kingdom. Dr. J. M. Allen, president of Eureka College, said at her funeral, "I am a better man because I knew her." A short time before her death, H. W. Everest, a frequent visitor in the home, remarked to the little granddaughter, "You should be proud to be the granddaughter of Mrs. Rumina Spencer." Mrs. Spencer had one daughter, Mrs. Lemert, of Kansas City, the mother of Miss Eva Lemert, the church school specialist, whose work is the subject of this appreciation.

The character of her mother and grandmother is a precious heritage to Miss Lemert who says that her work is always influenced by their memory. This, along with a great vision of service, accounts in no small measure for the abundant success of this Sunday-school leader.

(1) Rev. V. W. Blair, Pastor of Eureka Church. (2) Byron L. Colburn, Banker, far-seeing, of wide vision, broad sympathies, a leader who backs up every effort with all he has. (3) H. O. Pritchard, President Eureka College, Chief Instructor in the Church School Institute, a true friend of young people.

H. A. Pearson, "Associate Superintendent," a missionary enthusiast whose only two children are gladly given to the Foreign Field: Dr. Ernest Pearson of Liberia, Africa, and Miss Myrta Pearson who will go out in 1915. (2) Mrs. Hattie Genders, the Pastor's Faithful Secretary. (3) Richard Dickinson, General Superintendent, graduate of University of Illinois. President "Dickinson & Co." canners. One of the busiest of men, but never too busy for his pastor or any hard job for the church school or the church itself. A leader in reform, civic improvement and every campaign for righteousness. A "chum" of the young people and a Christian every day in the week.

AN EFFICIENCY EXPERT.

The members of the Eureka Christian Church were pleased this autumn to have Miss Lemert with us in an Efficiency Campaign. She was formerly a student in Eureka College, in which her grandmother had endowed a Bible Chair. Eureka's past is too well known to need any comment. Eureka has traditions. Great preachers have ministered here. Great leaders have gone from this body of Christians into nearly all fields of Christian service. The church takes up new plans with caution. The Church School was using the Graded Lessons. They had one of the best superintendents in the country. Results were being achieved. The field is exceedingly limited. Like the Japanese, they have no "intensive farming." They have little use for schemes and spectacular tricks. However, they are tremendously interested in the educational program of the local congregation as it relates itself to the needs of the community. They believed that Miss Lemert was the one to lead. In this, they were not disappointed. They have been started in the right direction.

Conditions are against any large increase in attendance, although the school has been enlarged considerably. Six well graded departments have trained superintendents leading each. There is now a school where there was formerly a crowd of pupils. With a very few exceptions the teachers are thoroughly trained and give their instruction in the four lower departments about the half-hexagon tables which in themselves increase a teacher's power very much. They use the Hammond Card System of record keeping, and Miss Lemert's Absentee Blank for the "follow up" plan, the latter being especially serviceable. Besides the organized classes of the Senior and Adult Departments they have the following well developed auxiliary forces to the Church School—Cradle Roll, home department and Mothers' Club. The last enrolls the mothers of all the children in the community below the Junior age. It meets once each month, and uses St. John's "Child Nature and Child Nurture" for a text book.

Eureka workers do not regard the Church School as an auxiliary of the church; it is the church itself exercising its teaching function. In announcing the meetings of Sunday morning they say "9:40 a. m., the church at study;" "11:00 a. m., the church at worship." The general superintendent is chosen by the Official Board of the church. He selects his own executive committee consisting of an elder, the educational director, the secretary and absentee superintendent, with the pastor ex-officio. This committee meets regularly each week, often with the various department heads. The business management of the school is left largely to the general superintendent, who seldom acts on important issues without the advice of his committee. The educational director supervises the teaching work of the whole school, constantly watching the work of each teacher and department leader. He is in charge of the Church School Institute which meets Tuesday evening each week. He arranges quarterly examinations, and the needed promotions, in all departments below the adult. Both the pupil's class grade and examination grade are kept on report cards which are sent for the parent's signature. The Institute now consists of two half-hour sections. The first is under President Pritchard, using W. W. Smith's "Child Study" for a text, with strong collateral reading.

COLLEGE CREDIT GIVEN.

For this course, a college credit is given to those who qualify. The second half-hour period is devoted to departmental work under the department heads, or those whom they secure. In all the departments but the adult, they are using Athearn's "Church School," supplying the material for each special department. The adult department is enjoying the study of Coe's "Religion of a Mature Mind," under the leadership of County Superintendent Moore. While the whole curriculum is not made out, it is planned that this term's work shall be but the beginning of a three or four years' course, of a quality as exact and thorough as any college course and to include English Bible, Biblical History, Psychology of Religion, Religious Pedagogy, Modern Church School, Christian Sociology, Pastoral Theology, and whatever may be required to standardize the work and to get the recognition of the International Sunday-school Association, and of the Religious Education Association.

These facts are given to show what Miss Lemert's program actually brings to pass even in a short time, and all feel that this is but the beginning. Miss Lemert is convinced that spasmodic efforts usually pass away. The Church School has a special, a basic, work to do in Christian education. People are saved by being saviors. The task is to save people from sinning, rather than to save sinners. The work of the Church School is "Teaching all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Modern Church School pedagogy is getting back to Christ. The problem is double—to touch in a live way the present church membership, and to reach the unchurched group. The whole educational problem is one and college, high school, the grades and the Church School should work in the closest sympathy, and correlate their forces. The teacher should fit truth to the pupil's every-day-life. Nothing less than the "Perfect Standard" is adequate, two important features of which are—for the pupil, daily study of the lesson; for the teacher, a personal contact, a vital touch with the pupil each week elsewhere than in the Sunday session. There are three words which express the outstanding considerations of all of Miss Lemert's work, and the interest in these she constantly inspires in others—God, character, service.

HUMILITY AND SINCERITY.

Miss Eva Lemert is interested in no ecclesiastical partyism, belongs to no clique. She represents nobody but her Master. Aggressive, exact, tactful, demanding results, quick to detect lapses, very susceptible to "atmosphere," a lover of children, a careful student of present-day needs. She is near to being the ideal person for the work she does so well. This is the second campaign in which she has helped me, and if ever the need comes for such another effort, I shall want her again. Not only is she one of the hardest workers with whom I ever have labored, but she leads others in service. More than to any other one thing, I attribute her success to that beautiful humility and sterling sincerity well revealed in a chance remark, "I long to come to that place in my work where the people shall see only the Master and never Miss Eva Lemert."

Christmas carols were sung on Christmas eve by the choir of First church of Norfolk, Va., assisted by other musical people whom they invited. They visited such institutions as the Ballentyne Home, St. Vincent's Hospital, and the Protestant Hospital and sang to cheer those who would otherwise have a gloomy Christmas.

Organize an Interdenominational School.

First church of Norfolk, Va., has organized an interdenominational school which now enrolls more than 90 pupils, and will enroll many others before its regular sessions begin on January 5. Dedication at Nelsonville, O.

Nelsonville, O., has erected a new Bible-school building and on December 27, Chas. Reign Scoville and his wife were present to help dedicate the edifice. Fourteen thousand dollars were raised in cash and three year pledges. This covers the entire indebtedness on the building. The value of the property is twenty-three thousand dollars.

Church Settles Trouble by Arbitration.

Things had come to be very serious in Cooper, Texas, and the church was so much divided that one faction was reported as locking out the other. The dissension had grown out of an election of deacons. Judge Dohoney had been asked to issue a writ of injunction compelling one group to open the church for the other. In the midst of the hearing, some one made the happy suggestion that the whole matter be settled out of court by arbitration in the Christian way. Both groups cordially agreed to refer the dispute to J. W. Denton, pastor at Roxton, and the case was withdrawn from court.

Aid Societies Practice Union.

The Ladies' Aid Societies of the United Brethren and Disciples' churches went together on a recent evening and provided a union dinner and oyster supper. The ladies of both societies agreed that the proceeds should be used to help pay off the debt which is upon the Christian church of the community. It is said the proceeds were unusually large.

Progress at Gas City, Ind.

Two months ago, J. Thomas Luckey, was called to the church at Gas City, Ind. This city is only five miles from his old home and only ten miles from the home of Mrs. Luckey. In two months, the Sunday school is increased so that it maintains an attendance three times what it was at the beginning. The invitation given in the school recently resulted in the confession of faith by a husband and wife. There have been a total of 27 confessions in two months. The preacher has been called on to conduct seven funerals in that period. Gas City is the home of three other preachers with regular appointments, J. H. Vinson, C. A. Johnson and C. R. Taylor.

Church Has Annual Banquet.

First church, of Los Angeles, has its annual meeting each year in connection with a banquet. This year the banquet will be held on January 8 and turkey will be served to the workers of this church while they hear the annual reports and plan for more aggressive work the coming year.

A Roll Call of Members.

Sterling Place church of Brooklyn has arranged to hold a roll call of the membership at the morning service on January 3. Every member of the church is expected to be present at the morning service to answer to his name. This church will have its annual meeting about the dinner table on January 20.

Another Church Calls T. A. Boyer.

T. A. Boyer resigned at the Oakland church in California recently to take effect in February of next year. He has been twelve years with this church and his work has been crowned with success. As soon as it was known that he was open for a call, he was invited to go to Portland, Ore., but declined. Now there is an announcement that the Richmond, Cal., church has called him and that he is giving the call consideration. Mr. Boyer appears frequently on the lecture platform and is known on the coast for his unusual gift of platform address.

A Dinner for the Official Board.

The elders and deacons of the church at Lancaster, Ky., along with the pastor, were invited to dinner one evening recently in the home of J. R. Haselden. The dining-room was decorated in the Christmas colors and there were dainty place cards with a verse appropriate to each man and the picture of a colored waiter. About the festive board, these church leaders developed spirit to attack the problems of the new year.

Rev. Leslie W. Morgan, Disciple minister, a leader in the intercession services at the City Temple, London.

Rev. H. D. C. Maclachlan, whose church, Seventh street, Richmond, Va., is doing rescue work in that city.

Church Takes Inventory.

At the annual meeting of the congregation recently Second church, Bloomington, Ill., took stock and counted up its achievements for the past year. The pastor, S. H. Zeal, reported 26 additions for the year and an active membership of 417. He has made 28 special addresses, preached 23 funeral sermons and officiated at 8 weddings. The church gave $611 to missions and contributed liberally to philanthropy and reform. One of the members, Eugene C. Ferguson, read an original poem as part of the evening's program.

Kansas Minister Passes away.

N. A. Stull, a minister of Kansas, recently passed away. He held evangelistic meetings at Denison, Kans., three years ago and was pastor at White Cloud for a time. His home in recent years was in Highland and he was buried from the church of that city.

Church Charges Admission Sunday Morning.

First church, Covington, Ky., which meets on Fifth Street, charged admission at a recent Sunday morning service. The pastor, Henry Webb, asked that everyone that came to church on December 13 should bring provisions for the poor, if only a potato. A peculiar looking Sunday morning audience was seen on the street that morning with market baskets on their arms. The largest attendance in the history of the church appeared, there being over a thousand worshipers. The supplies went to the poor of the city.

Church Ladies Remember the Aged.

The ladies of First church, Paris, Texas, packed a Christmas box for the aged living in the home conducted by the National Benevolent Association in Dallas, Texas. The ladies at the church on December 22 and the abundant supplies that were sent in were arranged for the use of the various old people who are being cared for by a sympathetic brotherhood.

Leslie W. Morgan in City Temple, London.

Daily intercession services are being held in the City Temple, London, where the widely known Rev. R. J. Campbell is pastor. At a recent noon meeting for the purpose of praying for the people who bore heavy burdens through the world war, Leslie W. Morgan, the prominent Disciple minister of London, led the meeting and spoke.

Lady of Eighty Years Joins Church.

It is rather an unusual sight to see a woman of eighty years unite with the church. J. M. Dawson in a meeting at Independence, Ind., had the privilege of baptizing and receiving into the church such an octogenarian. There were thirty-six added to the church in this meeting and the church made a journey to Attica, Ind., to use the baptistery where they were assisted by the pastor, A. M. Jackman.

Call to Prayer Frightens Town.

Williamsport, Ind., church arranged for a sunrise prayer meeting on Sunday morning, Dec. 6. No general announcement of the meeting had been made and when the church bell rang, it was thought by many that the church was on fire. One good citizen in scanty attire rushed to the building with a bucket of water. Doubtless the community will grow more accustomed to early meetings for worship after a time.

Congress of Mothers.

Central church, Huntington, Ind., recently furnished a meeting place, for the Eleventh District Congress of Mothers. Various prominent women of that section of the state spoke and the superintendent of schools in Huntington, H. L. Hall, added his contribution to the discussions of the congress.

Dedication at Jeromeville, O.

A new church building has gone up this year at Jeromeville, O., and the members of that church had the happy privilege of assisting in the dedication of the new building on December 13. J. V. Coombs of Danville, Ind., was the master of ceremonies at the dedicatory services and preached upon the theme, "The Three Kingdoms of Time." Following the dedication there was a series of revival services led by Mr. Coombs which were well attended.

Surprise the Pastor.

A party of 35 people stole stealthily up the steps of the parsonage at Muskegon, Mich., Dec. 14, and took the pastor, H. H. Wagner and his family by surprise. The occasion was Mr. Wagner's 35th birthday. The evening was spent in games and music. Dr. Thornton Daggy, in behalf of the congregation, made the presentation speech in connection with the presentation of an appropriate birthday gift.

Is Body of Minister Found?

A company of boys out hunting found the body of a dead man near Bridgeburg, Ont., recently. It is feared that the deceased man is William Hunt who once supplied the pulpit at First Church, Rochester, N. Y., but who later went to Bridgeburg to take the pulpit of the church in that city. He left Bridgeburg for Buffalo on July 8 and never returned. His friends have long been agitated by his strange disappearance. The clothes upon the body that was found are in bad condition but are said to resemble those worn by the pastor. The theory to account for the strange circumstance is that the minister was overtaken by disease suddenly and dragged himself into the bushes, dying before aid came. Thus the body was not found for a long time by not being on the roadside.

Walter Scott Priest Preaches to Women.

Walter Scott Priest, pastor of Central Church, Wichita, Kans., addressed the Woman's Federation of Clubs in that city on December 14. He said: "I've had my blood boil when I've been in department stores right here in Wichita and have seen women shoppers, crabbed, cross and sour, merely looking over goods. I have seen them crumple bolt after bolt of laces and other goods and not buy a cent's worth. And they have gone there without any intention of buying a cent's worth. Why, a man can go into a store, buy a suit and be out again in fifteen minutes. You say, 'Well, men haven't so many styles as women.' Well, I say thank the Lord for that. The girls in the stores, especially during the holiday rush, ought to have a chance. They don't. I wish that the women would insist upon department stores closing not later than 6 o'clock every evening, Saturdays included."

Church Wins Lawsuit for Money.

First church, St. Louis, of which John L. Brandt is pastor, was the beneficiary of a bequest giving the church $70,000 to found a home for boys in St. Louis. This bequest was left by Randall R. Gordon of Taylorville, Ill., who died Sept. 22, 1913. He cut off three of his five brothers with nothing. The brothers, who were not remembered, contested the will on the ground that the man making the will was of unsound mind. The church, and the two brothers who were receiving $150,000 under the will, defended the suit. The case was compromised out of court by the defendants agreeing to pay the costs of the suit if those who prosecuted the case would drop it. The church now has a net sum of $67,000 with which to do its work for boys. Mr. Gordon had united with the St. Louis church only a year before his death and was a personal friend of Mr. Brandt.

Pastor Helps City Get Water.

H. H. Peters of Paris, Ill., is not only active in the city as the minister of a church of 1,200 members, but he is taking a leading part in the city's commercial and industrial development. The water problem in Paris has been serious for several years. Recently a mass meeting of citizens appointed a commission of eleven to make recommendations pertaining to the water supply. Mr. Peters was made a member of the Commission. After thorough investigations the commission recommended a new reservoir at an expenditure of $90,000. The bond issue carried eight to one and the work is being prosecuted as rapidly as possible. Mr. Peters is also active in the work of the Chamber of Commerce, which is trying to secure more manufacturing plants for the city.

Rev. H. H. Peters, pastor at Paris, Ill., who is helping to solve some of that town's industrial problems.

Small Church Becomes Living Link.

A party of missionary workers from Hutchinson, Kan., visited Langdon, Dec. 14, and asked the church at the latter point to support a missionary in India. This church has only 175 members but the money was raised, three men giving a hundred dollars each to the project. In the party were Dr. C. C. Drummond, medical missionary from Hurda, India, Bert Wilson, western secretary of the Foreign Society, Fay Livengood recently from Turkey, and Ray Rice of Lincoln, Neb. Such a company of workers is sufficient explanation of the result that was achieved.

Women Pay Two Thousand Dollars.

The women of First church, Springfield, Ill., had a big celebration on the afternoon of December 14. They had completed a fund of two thousand dollars on a pledge toward the building fund made when their beautiful building was erected a few years ago. They publicly burned their building fund note. The society is called the General Aid Society.

President Cramblet Reported Out of Danger.

The physicians have removed 172 shot from the body of President Cramblet of Bethany College, Bethany, W. Va., and they believe they have nearly all of them. The accident reported last week was really more serious than first reported. However, it is thought that by this time the president is out of danger of blood poisoning which was the chief hazard of the unhappy occurrence.

Minister Preaches Hundred Dollar Sermon.

The people were raising money at Bucklin, Kans., to cover a deficit and to make provision for the needs of the church during the winter. The minister in charge, E. C. Whittaker, announced that he had three sermons, one was a five cent one, one was a medium one and one was a hundred dollar one and he would give them the one they paid for. The congregation raised the hundred dollars needed.

A Church Reunion at Shelby, Ind.

The church at Shelby, Ind., is young but not too young to have a reunion, which occurred on Nov. 25. There were 200 people present. Addresses were given presenting the activities of the Sunday-school, the church board, the Ladies' Aid, and the Knights of Garfield. The minister, J. S. Van Orman, made an address on "Thanksgiving." This church began a two weeks' series of revival services with S. O. Landis on Dec. 27.

Secretary Visits Iowa.

Graham Frank, Secretary of the General Convention, exchanged pulpits with Walter M. White, president of the General convention and preached at Cedar Rapids, Ia., on Dec. 13. While in Iowa, Mr. Frank visited in Des Moines calling on Dr. Finis Idleman of Central Church and Dr. Chas. S. Medbury of University Place church. Mr. Frank announces that there would be a meeting of the executive and advisory committee of the General convention at St. Louis on Dec. 29.

President Cramblet Given Banquet.

On the evening of Dec. 8, before the deplorable accident noted last week, President Cramblet of Bethany college was given a banquet by the faculty members at Cochran Hall. The menu cards were done by hand in water colors and represented winter scenes. They were the work of Miss Irwin, the college art teacher. Prof. W. B. Taylor was toastmaster. There were three toasts which were full of complimentary tributes, given by Mrs. Bourne, Prof. Gay and Prof. Moos. The faculty expressed their feeling of full sympathy and co-operation with the president.

British Disciples Become Soldiers.

The Christian Monthly, a Disciple paper of England edited by Leslie W. Morgan of London, contains a lengthy list of Disciples from the various British churches that are on the field of battle in behalf of their country. The members at home are urged to pray for these men every day. The Gloucester church has the largest list with 37 men enrolled. This church reports the loss of one man from wounds received in action, Edward Butler. The war is making a very material difference in the work of this group of churches.

Phonograph Record for Sunday-schools.

Robert M. Hopkins, Bible School Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society is nearly ubiquitous but not being satisfied yet, he has arranged to make speeches all over the country on the same Sunday. He sends out phonograph records to Sunday-schools containing his speech and it is produced on local machines. This speech was heard by phonograph recently in Ninth Street school, Washington, D. C., where Geo. A. Miller is pastor, and it is said that 700 people heard the address distinctly.

Churches Apportioned for Subscriptions.

South Carolina has had a state paper for a year but the brethren have not been prompt in renewing the subscriptions. The paper is the organ of the organized work of that state. Forty churches of the state have received apportionments showing how many subscriptions they must turn in, in order that the paper shall not suspend. The aggregate of subscriptions asked is about five hundred.

A Country Christmas for Students.

Nelson H. Trimble, who wishes to be known as "the country parson" and who preaches for several country churches out from Columbia, Mo., had a plan to help the students of the state university. He had received more invitations for Christmas dinners among the genial country people of Missouri than he was able to accept. Unwilling that these creature blessings should go to waste, he proposed to many of the homes where he was invited to send a substitute to eat Christmas dinner for him. Many of the students of the state university are a thousand miles from home and did not get back for the family reunion and Yuletide celebrations. These lonesome youths were given the hospitality of the Missouri country homes in the parishes of "the country parson."

Physician and Minister Dies.

A. P. Terrill of Ft. Worth, Tex., is reported as having passed away recently. He was formerly pastor at Carrolton, Mo. He had studied osteopathy and was practicing his profession as well as preaching at the time of his death. No particulars of his death have yet been received.

Dr. George H. Combs Preaches Tolerance.

Dr. George H. Combs, preaching in the series of special services at First church of Bloomington, Illinois, one evening preached upon the subject of miracles. Among other things that he said was the following: "I hold that the attitude of the church of Christ toward men and women who reject the miracles of Jesus should be that of broadest friendship. Dr. Jefferson, when a young man about to enter the ministry, asked this question of Phillips Brooks: 'Is it necessary for me to believe in the miracles of Jesus?' Dr. Brooks' answer was exceedingly wise. He said, 'I don't say that you must, but I do say that you may.' Were I to lose my faith in the miracles of Jesus, and, after a confession of that loss of faith, be told by the elders of my church to 'preach the gospel as you understand it' I should do so, but I should remember my brothers to whom that faith was dear. God keep me from speaking the word that robs a soul of its faith consolations."

Pastor Helps in a Social Survey.

Six months ago, the Rotary Club of Sioux City, Ia., made J. R. Perkins, pastor of First Church there, chairman of a committee to investigate housing conditions in Sioux Falls. On his committee was Lt.-Governor Harding. The committee found conditions to be such that a change in the state law was required. A new housing law has been written in this committee and will come before the Iowa legislature at an early date. It is a very significant service to the entire state.

Pastor Makes a Change.

J. Irving Brown, pastor at Sac City, Ia., has resigned and will go to Adel, Ia., as soon as a suitable residence is found in the latter city. The past year has been a very successful one at the Sac City church. It is reported sixty-four members were received by the church. The pastor has conducted twenty-eight funerals and officiated at twenty-one wedding. The receipts of the church in all of its departments for twelve months has been about $2,700. The Sac City church recently held a "Home-coming" and over 200 members sat down to supper together.

Church Has Large C. W. B. M. Services.

The church at Bellflower, Ill., had large audiences on C. W. B. M. day. Charles Innis spoke on missions in the Philippines and W. C. McDougall of Chicago, spoke on his experiences in India. There was a fine impression from the day's work. An offering of twenty-three dollars was taken.

Why Christian Century News Excells.

It is now generally recognized that The Christian Century news service is the best in the brotherhood because it does not relate itself exclusively to any one department of Christian activity. This service has been made possible by the many pastors who mail their church bulletins to The Christian Century every week. These weekly statements of the congregational activities enable the news editor to understand what the churches are doing in their various departments.

Good Work at Columbus, O.

Three months ago, Chicago Avenue Church, Columbus, O., was in a deplorable condition. Its membership was divided and discouraged and the church was badly in debt. Through the instrumentality of Gordon P. Langdon, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Adams, were persuaded to come to assist in building up the work. They at once began a series of meetings which accomplished good results. All difficulties were adjusted and the dissatisfied ones returned to the fold. There were 46 new members added to the church and money was raised to carry on the work. Mr. Adams is a leader and a pulpit speaker of ability. His wife is a worker among the young people.

New Version of the Patmont Mystery.

Another explanation has been offered for the mysterious actions of Louis R. Patmont, whose alleged abduction was the talk of the newspaper world for weeks following his disappearance at Danville, Ill., last spring. He later disappeared from Detroit, Mich., and after much anxious waiting, his friends heard of him again at Rib Lake, Wis. Here he recently instituted proceedings divorcing his wife. Now the report comes that Mr. Patmont explains his strange actions by asserting that he was the victim of "walking typhoid" and that the disease, while not severe enough to make him take his bed, affected his mental powers and subjected him to strange impressions. He is now assisting his brother in a Polish mission at Stevens Point.

Minister Returns to His College Town.

There is some special interest attaching to the call of Paul G. Preston to the church at Angola, Ind., this fall. Angola was his college town, for here he attended the Tri-State College in days gone by. In Angola, he first believed the gospel and devoted his life to the ministry. It was here, too, that he found his life companion. After many years spent in other fields, he is returning to these scenes of his early life decisions. He went to Angola from Fort Smith, Ark.

Church Fights Tuberculosis.

Broadway Church, Lexington, Ky., has been helping fight tuberculosis. The churches of the city have been interested in promoting the sale of the Red Cross stamps. A committee from Broadway Church, of which Mark Collis is pastor, took its turn and made a very flattering report of their success. The money realized from the sale of the stamps was used mostly for local purposes, in order that victims of tuberculosis who were too poor to pay their way in a sanitorium might be provided with the means of fighting the white plague.

Sunday-school Superintendent Surprised.

A. E. McLallen, superintendent of the Sunday-school at Union City, Pa., invited the Good Samaritan Class to his house on December 11. Instead of coming that date, the class went two days earlier and took their trusted leader by surprise. The occasion was his birthday. There was a program, a nice lunch was served, and the class presented Mr. McLallen with a very beautiful Bible. There was a conference over the new year's work and the evening closed with a most happy anticipation of what the next twelve months will bring forth for the school.

Church Edifice Burns.

The church at Broadwell, Ill., burned recently and for some time it was not known what the cause of the fire was. It is now the common belief that the gasoline lighting system of the church was the cause of the combustion. The congregation worships in the Methodist building for the present.

Church Advertises for a Minister.

Sheridan, Mo., church advertised for a minister recently and received replies from 44 men. The officers of the church now have the task of discovering why all these men are applying for the position and what ones are worthy. Many of those applying have had numerous short pastorates.

Church Grows in One Year.

A mission transformed into a church with 450 members in one year, is the record achievement for the city missionary forces of Kansas City. A new suburb grew up in Budd Park and the Disciples were there at the beginning. During the past year a $45,000 church edifice was dedicated. The Bible school has grown until it now has an enrollment of over 600. W. H. Scrimer is the pastor.

Head of Junior Republic Speaks.

Canton, O., church is having a lecture course this winter and on December 15 William H. George, founder of the Junior Republic at Freeville, N. Y., delivered an address. In easy conversational style he told the story of the founding of the republic. Its basic principle is the creation of a community life for the boys and girls and making them feel the responsibility of their actions. The republic has its own currency and the labor of the children is paid for in this currency which can be spent at the community store. Two other similar settlements have been started at Ithaca, N. Y. and Portland, Ore. Canton church was much interested in this address. The next number on their lecture program will be an address by S. C. Schmucker on February 19.

Official Board Serves a Supper.

Greeley, Colo., church welcomed a number of new members recently and a novel social evening was planned for December 15. The Official Board members cooked and served a supper to the congregation. While there were knowing smiles passing among the ladies with regard to the methods employed in the service, the evening proved to be a very pleasant one. It is said several plates of soup were spilt by the waiters.

Pastor Becomes Mayor.

Harley Jackson, pastor of the Pullman, Wash., church ran for mayor this fall on the reform ticket. The city is a large coast state. So strong did the minister run in the political race that he was elected by a majority of 507. He has lived in Pullman only a year and his election is a great compliment to him. His boyhood home was Bedford, Ind. He has not announced whether he will go on with the church work.

A Banquet for the Young Men.

One of the most successful and enjoyable social evenings ever held at the church was that at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., one evening recently. The superintendent of the Sunday-school, D. L. Croft, gave a banquet to the young men of his school. There were toasts and a program of music and readings. Thirty young men were present. One result of the banquet may be the formation of a young men's club in connection with the church.

Contest in Oratory.

A capital event of the college at Hiram is always the Inter-society Oratorical Contest. It occurred on Friday evening, Dec. 4, this year. Kelley O'Neall, of Wilmington, Hesperian, won first place in an oration on "The Brand of Cain." He will represent the college in the state contest. U. Radcliffe Bell, of Versailles, Ill., Delphic, was a close contestant for second place in an oration on "Will Power." Both young men are doing effective pulpit work, one at Newton Falls and the other at Chagrin Falls.

Church Holds "Open House."

Evanston church, Chicago, held open house December 9, and the people brought in canned goods to be shipped to the Belgians. There was a very liberal response on the part of the members and friends of the church. The supplies were turned over to the Woman's Club of the city which was shipping a car to the sea-board with similar supplies. This church held its annual election on a recent date and has in many ways the strongest group of men at the helm that it has ever had.

In and Around Chicago

Irving Park church did a beautiful thing the day before Christmas. Through the charity organization of the community, the names of a hundred poor children were secured and these were brought to the church and given a Christmas party. There was a tree and presents as well as a program with good music. This church sent out twenty Christmas baskets to poor families. They also sent a wagon load of provisions and old clothing down to the Falkenstein settlement house where they were distributed among the needy. W. Garnett Winn is the minister.

New Year's eve will be observed at Irving Park church with a Watch Night Service. The evening will open with a chicken dinner at 7:30 and will close with a prayer-meeting at the midnight hour. Interspersed between there will be various kinds of instruction and entertainment.

The church edifice at Irving Park is being changed in some important ways and an addition built to it. In February, Geo. L. Snively will be present to help dedicate the remodeled building.

Memorial church sent out Christmas baskets for the poor this year and in other ways expressed its interest in the unfortunate of the city. C. C. Morrison, H. L. Willett and E. S. Ames will speak at this church on the evening of January 3 on "The Mission of the Disciples of Christ."

The Jackson Boulevard church sent out thirty baskets to poor families with Christmas dinners in them. This church will observe watch night this year as usual.

Evanston church had a very pleasant Christmas entertainment the Tuesday after Christmas. Watch Night will be observed and on this night all departments of the church will present their annual reports. There will be a stereopticon lecture by the pastor and a Victrola concert. The young people have arranged a social hour with games and refreshments. The evening will close with a prayer-meeting.

O. F. Jordan will present a book review of Bouck White's, "The Call of the Carpenter," on January 4, at the ministers' meeting.

NEWS FROM THE FOREIGN SOCIETY.

The new building of the Girls' College, Tokyo, Japan, was dedicated December 8. Miss Bertha Clawson says it is beautiful.

The missionaries in Japan think that the visit of the commission is all too short. R. A. Doan and family will remain in Japan during the holidays. Then he goes back to China for some special work. Secretary Stephen J. Corey and Prof. W. C. Bower reached San Francisco December 28.

Dr. W. E. Macklin completed his campaign in Australia and sailed for China the last week in November. He is probably in Nanking at this time. He and his family were greatly benefited by the delightful climate. They kept him quite busy throughout the land. He also visited Aucland and Wellington, in New Zealand.

The church at Langdon, Kans., becomes a living-link in the Foreign Society. This step was taken through the special influence of Secretary Bert Wilson, ably and heartily seconded by the very efficient and wide awake pastor, J. T. Sapp.

Miss Alma Favors will return to China, sailing from San Francisco, January 9.

Interest in the "Every-Member-Canvass" is spreading among the churches. The Foreign Society is receiving many accounts of great victories. The preachers are usually devoting a month of preaching and the distribution of literature in preparing the churches for the canvass.

In a personal letter Secretary Stephen J. Corey, referring to the other members of the Commission, says: "Doan and Bower have been a great blessing to the missionaries. The China mission has unanimously requested that R. A. Doan stay on with them three months this winter and that he with Alexander Paul, conduct evangelistic services and organize Bible classes in all of our stations. He has consented to do so and his work will be a great blessing. He is a mighty, level-headed, consecrated, business man. He loves the cause with all his heart. The Philippine mission writes urging him to come there for some months, and the Japan mission is going to insist that he stay here at least for a while." On account of the great war, Mr. Doan and

"In Time of War Prepare for Peace"

This greatest of all wars fills all minds. Not only are there greater armies than ever before and more deadly weapons, but new modes of warfare in the air and under the sea. The paralyzing influence of war, also, is felt throughout the civilized world as never before. It is humanity's war.

Doubtless the United States as the greatest neutral power will have an important part in the final settlement, and it is none too early to begin the study of the underlying causes of war and of the conditions necessary to peace.

Cannot our classes do something to create an enlightened public opinion touching this whole subject? Note the studies for 1915 in Josiah Strong's magazine of social study

The Best!

Many Sunday School classes will wish to study the life of Jesus this new year. They want the very best text for young people's or adult classes that can be found. This is simply to remind them that there has never been offered to the Sunday School world a Life of Christ so practical, so usable, so true to the best scholarship, so bristling with questions that wake up the pupils, so well proportioned, as Dr. Loa E. Scott's LIFE OF JESUS in Fifty-two Lessons. It is being widely used in Sunday Schools and Y. M. C. A. classes. It is being used in numerous leading Sunday Schools both of the Disciples and other religious bodies. This testifies to its popularity. You must have it in your school. Price 50c. In quantities of 10 or more, 40c each.

family will probably not go on to India as they first planned, but will return to America some time the coming summer.

H. C. Hobgood made a missionary tour in the Congo region and one afternoon had the joy of baptizing 324. On the same evening he married 110 couples. Most of these, he says, were living as husbands and wives before. Three chiefs and five subchiefs were baptized. This is really a great news item and will be mentioned and talked about in the social circle, the prayer-meeting, and referred to in our pulpits. It is a fine illustration of the power of the gospel and the success of missions.

Alexander Paul, Wuhu, China, spent about four months in overseeing the construction of dikes in that district for the Chinese. This enterprise will help to save great property interest from the devastation of mighty floods. It will help also to save large numbers of people from famine and want. About 7,000 men were employed. The cost was $35,000, gold, which is a great sum in China. The average amount paid a Chinaman for such labor is only a few cents per day. $35,000 goes a long ways. The funds were all in the hands of Mr. Paul, so implicit was the confidence of the government in the missionary. As a recognition of his efficiency and faithfulness the Chinese erected a large tablet in his honor. This action is characteristic of the Chinese. What was done by Mr. Paul will tell mightily for the advancement of the interest in missions.

Secretary Stephen J. Corey writes: "Japan is opening up to the gospel meetings as she did twenty-five or thirty years ago, and there seems to be a seriousness throughout the whole land in their longings for better ideals that promises great things for the Cross, if the church will make good before the Japanese. The work never before looked so hopeful, but we do need native leaders both here and in China for this critical hour, and we do not have them trained in sufficient numbers or sufficiently well. Japan today demands the very best Christianity can give."

Prof. Geo. W. Brown, Jubbulpore, India, says: "Things are taking a more settled appearance in India and the work is going on very much as it does in ordinary years. In military circles there is, of course, much activity. But personally I have every confidence in the ability of the government to handle any situation which one may reasonably expect to arise."

W. L. Burner, of Matanzas, Cuba, reports as follows: "Yesterday was the annual festal day for the Virgin of the Monserrat, one of the many shrines worshiped at by the Catholics. There was a continual stream of automobiles passing the church all day going to the shrine. It is supposed to be a religious function of the Spaniards, but it has turned into feasting and carousing. Last night was spent in dancing."

W. R. Hunt, while in England on furlough, is in the tents with the troops at the camps at Great White City, where there are some 20,000 men. He writes that the facilities given for service with the soldiers has spurred him on to do what little he can with them. The experience gained in the Chinese Revolution army serves him well. He says: "It is a unique time for a revival, and with the nation sobered to a point of seriousness enough to look up to higher issues, it is a strategic moment to live and work for God."
